Every musician, every singer, every dancer and actor, whether performing solo or ensemble, is to be individually thanked. Thanked for dreaming of moments when they can stand before you to entertain, enlighten, and amuse. Thanked for their time sacrificed to hone their skills. Thanked for seeking the arts as their form of expression.

We're all better for their efforts. James V. Zizzi understands labors of love, and his homes stand before you as testament. Which is why James V. Zizzi Contracting is a proud supporter of the Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center.

A Best Buy From The Languedoc

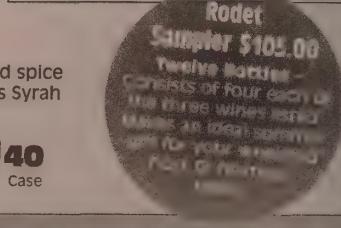

Renowned for over 20 years, Burgundy-lovers have long enjoyed Antonin Rodet's wines from their estates in the Cote Chalonnaise, Cote de Beaune and Cote de Nuits. Their exceptional skill in vineyard growing, vinification and aging of Pinot Noir and Chardonnay led them to look for an adventure outside of Burgundy.

After a long and meticulous search they chose the foothills of the Pyrenees mountains in the Languedoc. Here they found all the assets needed to make great wine: rich, sloping land; good quality clay and limestone soil; and ideal climatic conditions due to the high altitude. Their goal is to produce the greatest Pinot Noir and Chardonnay outside of Burgundy. After sampling the wines below, we're sure you'll agree with their wise choice.

RODET CHARDONNAY 2003 Aged in oak barrels, this well-crafted Chardonnay is sure to be a crowd pleaser. Golden in color, it has delicate aromas of fresh apricot, peach and pineapple fruit. It is soft and lush on the palate with beautifully balanced acidity. (4439)

RODET PINOT NOIR 2003 Ruby red in color with tinges of purple, this ripe and pleasantly fruity wine displays a delicate spicy touch. Look for cherry, strawberry and raspberry fruit that is well-balanced by oak aging. (4441)

RODET SYRAH 2003 A delicate bouquet of black currants, black cherries and spice evolves into violets, irises and peonies. This full-bodied, concentrated and delicious Syrah reveals good structure and length. (4451)

■ "A wine aficionado's paradise," this legendary Madison Avenue purveyor, once again the Survey's No.1 store in its category, is lauded for its "deep, deep selection" that while "strongest in high-end Bordeaux" (find "that double magnum of '82 Lafite-Rothschild") is "comprehensive" in all regions and price points, including nearly 400 options under $10; rest assured, "even if you don't look rich and want an inexpensive bottle of Beaujolais," the staff will be "helpful," but if you can't stop by, or are frustrated that only a "fraction of the bottles are on display," they "have a great Web site" and catalog, both of which include lots of accessories.

THE BALD EAGLE

From some of the best Californian soil, these Bald Eagle selections are the ideal solutions for those who want true Californian varietal flavors at modest cost. We move so many pianos we could give lessons.

In fact we do. The professionals from Despatch Moving and Storage that pad, pack, load, drive, and unload your possessions have received hours and hours of training long before we let them touch any of your belongings, let alone your Baby.

Despatch began moving people in 1910. Even then they realized the key to successful moves wasn't just strong backs and powerful trucks. It was heart. Caring about the people they were moving and the things that made their house a home were more important.

Today, the thank you letters we receive from our clients are music to our ears. Many of the words used strike a familiar chord – careful, friendly, understanding, professional, courteous, and efficient. We're not surprised. Moving pianos is not our only forte. Our staff knows how to baby your antiques, collectibles, fine art, furniture, as well as your floors and walls. In short, if you're planning a move call us — but only if you want to be babied in grand style.

THE HAMPTONS 2050...

All Gone

Hampton Polo, Fundraisers, Mansions and Cocktails by the Sea

By Dan Rattiner

Remember the good old days? We had the potato farmers, the clammers and baymen, the commercial fishermen. Those were the days before the arrival of the rich and famous, and we remember those times and honor them. We even provide financial incentives to those who want to continue on with these old traditions. There are tax breaks for those who farm, there are liberal laws to encourage farmstands. There's a marine museum in Amagansett and a proposal to fund a boat building barn in the Springs.

But what if the rich and famous left the Hamptons? I am envisioning a day fifty years from now. Would we be honoring the rich and famous as we now honor the farmers and fishermen? The Hamptons are now "out." And the new place for the rich in the northeast in the summer is Port Newark. It's gone through a major revival. It's gorgeous. And it's just a hop, skip and jump from Manhattan.

Meanwhile, the Hamptons, after going through a disastrous decline, are ready to embrace just about anything. And what has come along is...Nestlé. The Nestlé Chocolate Company of Hamburg, Germany, has been looking for something in America to balance

Hershey, Pennsylvania and, lo and behold, it's been discovered that the Hamptons have an absolutely perfect climate for planting and harvesting chocolate beans. It also helps that the Hamptons are among the closest points in America to the Nestlé headquarters in Hamburg, Germany. Factories are built, docks are constructed, new leaders from the chocolate industry move in and get elected to local government. We become a string of Nestlé com-

Well, choices have to be made. There are fifteen golf courses in the Hamptons. The first ten get bought up by Nestlé and converted to chocolate fields, but historians insist that we save the last five.

"Poxabogue is only nine holes," says a Vice President at Nestlé. "Let it go."

And so they do. And the bulldozers come in flatten Poxabogue, and it gets planted in chocolate.

As for the other four, the historians win two and the chocolate people win two. Among those that fall to the chocolate bean is the National. Opponents say it is a reminder of a very distant past when blacks and Jews were denied membership there. Proponents say the same thing is true about Shinnecock, so that should go too. But Shinnecock is saved because four U. S. Opens were held there.

"The Opens were fully integrated," the Nestlé Vice President says. "The Opens are what people will remember. Nestlé is not without respect for the past."

And so Shinnecock stays open. But you can't play it. The fairways are behind velvet ropes. Divots would be a sacrilege.

Also saved is one very big fundraiser. In the old days in the summertime there were ten pany towns. And we prosper.

But we are company towns with a heart. Nestlé's policy is to preserve the heritage of those places it takes over, and the heritage everyone in the Hamptons remembers at this point is the recently ended era of the rich, the movie stars, the investment bankers and media billionaires who held sway in the Hamptons.

BREAKING NEWS

A group of aggrieved property owners have commenced a lawsuit to annul the recent zoning amendments adopted by three of the five members of the Village Board Village of Southampton.

The amendments to the Village zoning laws drastically reduce the overall size and living area of homes people can build in all the residential zones in the Village. The 2,300 homes in the Village are all impacted by the new law.

The zoning amendments were pushed through by three members of the Village Board, Trustees Bates, McFarlane and Steudte, without the benefit of any comprehensive study and in direct contravention of the recommendations of the Village Planning Commission, which had recently concluded a one year study of the issue. The three trustees acted despite overwhelming opposition expressed at Village Meetings.

The action was filed in the Supreme Court in Riverhead.

fundraisers every weekend. But now they are gone. All gone. Now, on the Fourth of July weekend, there is what is known as the "Joint Fundraiser." It takes place under a big white tent on the lawn at Villa Maria in Water Mill. (Now Nestle's American Headquarters.) And the beneficiaries are the American Heart Association, the American Cancer Society, MS, the Retreat, Hospice, the Animal Rescue Fund and Bide-a-Wee.

Everyone gets all dressed up in formal attire and there is the Woody Herman Orchestra and dancing and a raffle and a silent auction. The great-grandson of Christie Brinkley is the master of ceremonies, and fifty-two dollars are raised because nobody has any money. The town kicks in a hundred thousand. And Nestle kicks in four million and it's a huge success.

All the private schools that have sprung up in the Hamptons have long since closed, but the town votes to preserve one building. It is the Wellness Center building at the Ross School in East Hampton. A class is taught there in Religious Art and Sculpture of the early Middle Ages. Nobody comes, but because it's fully funded, the teacher teaches, anyway. The rest of the closed down Ross School is now the big factory complex that makes the rice crispies that go in Nestle's Crunch.

The battle to save the Polo matches at Two Trees Farm in Bridgehampton results in a victory for the historians, but there are conditions. The Polo Matches are allowed to continue, but only as long as they can use the same horses and riders. Also, the same two trees must still remain standing out front. The game goes on, but slowly. The horses stagger around, and Neil Hirsch and Peter Brandt both suffer from cataracts and arthritis. Meanwhile, out front, armed guards stand in front of each of the trees. It can't go on much longer.

The Hampton Classic Horse Show continues on, but it has slowly but surely been transformed during the fifty years. At first, Nestle's involvement was just a table with a jar on it that said "Guess the Number of Chocolate Beans" and win a Nestle's Chocolate Bar. But it's expanded. Now there is just one horse left, who people come over and pet, and there are chocolate competitions in the stadium. Men in Nestle delivery trucks race around a track and go up ramps to leap over fences. People think the name Hampton Classic Horse Show is kind of chic, since there is only one horse. But it isn't.

Five giant mansions down on the beach, one in each village, are now owned and maintained by the Old Wealthy People Summer Mansion Conservancy. They rent them out, or try to rent them out, to wealthy people. Signs are put up in Port Newark. And a few brave souls "slum" in the Hamptons by renting them. You have to agree to let guides with megaphones come in with tourists once a day for an hour, but if you're willing to accept that, the rent is just $75 a month.

Where the other summer mansions were — and they all were bulldozed — there are now chocolate bean fields and along the ocean, warehouses filled with sacks of beans to be loaded on the freighters that dock alongside the jetties that have been built every 1000 feet along the ocean.

But don't miss the Private Plane/Private Yacht Exhibit alongside a special jetty that Nestle has donated for that purpose. This features a 185-foot yacht with a helicopter, a launch and a Honda Civic on a special deck near the stern. To walk through the exhibit, you buy a ticket inside a Lear Jet that is parked alongside.

The Hampton Music Festival continues under the tent on Snake Hollow Road. In fact, it's thriving. But you have to have a special taste for it now, because it plays German Polkas exclusively for all ten days.

Visitors do love it, though. It's a special place where people can sit at tables, drink beer, pinch the costumed waitresses, get drunk and eat chocolate bars.

And then there is Rich Person's Storyteller Day. On this day, people tell stories about the time Baby Jane Holtzer swung from a chandelier in Southampton, or how financier Ted Ammon got murdered in East Hampton.

Thus do we remember the Rich.

Collision

A Famous Beach House and the Mayor of West Hampton Dunes

By Dan Rattiner

In the 1950s and early 1960s, an ambitious project was begun in the town of Southampton to armor the homes of the property owners along the beach with stone jetties. No one objected at first. The stone jetties were begun in Quogue, the first one sticking out into the ocean one hundred yards and the second one, to the west a quarter of a mile, also sticking out a hundred yards. You could walk out on them at the time, jumping from one boulder to another, and you still can today. The project, which was supposed to total twenty-six jetties from Quogue to the Moriches inlet five miles away, would have protected almost one thousand small oceanfront homes from the ravages of erosion. The sand, drifting along the beach from Montauk to Far Rockaway, would get caught up in the teeth of these jetties. And a big barrier of sand would result. The homes would be safe.

This project, however, was never fully finished. In the late 1960s, protesters began to demonstrate against what was perceived to be the ruin of the environment and the use of taxpayers' money to benefit the rich. These protests got so bad that in 1968, at the very peak of the hippie movement, the County of Suffolk voted to let the protesters have their way. They abandoned the project with only fifteen jetties protecting about four miles. It had enormous ramifications, including the smashing into tinder and the washing away into the ocean of almost 200 private oceanfront homes in Westhampton Beach, and, just last week, a decision to reject the placing of an oceanfront museum in the Village of West Hampton Dunes.

The first result of the abandonment of the jetty project was the destruction of the homes. Because the sand drifting from east to west got

As for the individual properties, surveyors said they were now a series of underwater rectangles in the Atlantic Ocean. On the sand under these rectangles, underwater, there was still much of the debris of the homes that once stood above.

That this had gone on for so long with nobody doing anything about it seemed amazing to this reporter. The homeowners, mostly from Manhattan and Nassau County, each individually filed lawsuits — against Southampton Town, against the jetty building company, against the Federal government, the State of New York, the Army Corps of Engineers, and, of course, the County of Suffolk. A thousand lawsuits clogged the courts by 1980, staggering in their complexity. And finally, the sea broke through to the bay and completely cut off the remaining homes still above water. The peninsula was now an island.

And on one side, a new inlet was formed. It was named Pike's Inlet. It was all over.

Or was it?

Around 1993, a smart Nassau County lawyer who owned one of these rectangles got a brilliant idea. His name was Gary Vegliante. What if he got all the property owners together — with their family members they numcaught up in the teeth of the jetty field, there was none left to protect the shoreline beyond the most westerly of the jetties. After that jetty, the sea simply scoured away the beach, exposing the homes. Over the next ten years, the sea shattered one home after another along a distance of two miles. Eventually, power lines were downed, cesspools were washed away, the remaining homes were abandoned and many were vandalized before crashing into the surf.

bered about 700 — and voted themselves as a Village? And so that's how the Village of West Hampton Dunes was formed. No courthouse, no village hall, no police station, no court system, nothing. Just some stationery with the name VILLAGE OF WEST HAMPTON DUNES on it with a post office box. And the name Gary Vegliante, as Mayor.

Armed with this stationery, Vegliante wrote letter after letter to the Federal government pleading for help. The people in Washington read this, and said, what? A village has been cut off by the sea? The houses ripped away? And so millions of dollars were found to save this small American town, and around 1990, an enormous corrugated steel wall was installed cutting across Pike's Inlet. The top of it stood ten feet above sea level, while down below, pile drivers had shoved it down thirty feet into the sea bottom. It was over a mile long and it saved the Village. Together with a decision to shorten the last two western jetties to sort of taper things down, the sand from the east began to flow again, and the steel wall became the underground backbone of a small 400' oceanfront parcel to the west of where the inlet was, rose up and became Pike's Beach. It was owned by the Town of Southampton, but within the incorporated limits of the Village of West Hampton Dunes.

* * *

The thousand or so homes on Dune Road along the shoreline between Hampton Bays and Westhampton Beach are for the most part pretty small; bungalows built in a simpler time — in the 1940s and 1950s. They were A-frames and beachhouses, summer places for their owners, never meant for year around occupancy.

Several of them are considered architectural gems, and one of them, known since its construction as the Double Diamond House, is considered one of the best examples of mid-century modern architecture, by no less than architectural critic Alistair Gordon. It was rated one of the top ten works of modern residential architecture in America by the New York Observer in 2001.

It was built by an architect named Andrew Geller for a Mr. and Mrs. Pearlroth in 1959. Consisting of two attached cubes standing on their points, it was a piece of pop art that floated on pilings five feet above the dunes and afforded a magnificent view of the sea in front and the bay in the back. It was two bedrooms, a living room and kitchen and took up just 650 square feet. When Mrs. Pearlroth once complained about the fact that there were no closets, she called the architect, who told her "It's a beach house. Hammer in a nail."

Today, this house is still in the family, owned by the grandson of the Pearlroths, Jonathan Pearlroth, and his wife Holly. The house is in the part of the beach protected by the jetties, but today, because of this, the sand between the house and the sea is so high and so wide that you can no longer see the water. The jetties here are, from one perspective, a great success. From another, it has made the Pearlroths want to tear down the Double Diamond and build themselves a two-story home of perhaps 2,000 square feet. But how can you take down an architectural treasure?

Jonathan Pearlroth had an idea. He went to the Town Board and offered them the Double Diamond for $1 if they could find a use for it somewhere, keep it intact and move it off the property. He brought with him a photographer and historian, Jake Gorst, who is the grandson of the original architect Andrew Geller, and who also lives on the East End. Gorst was willing to head up a committee to raise the necessary funds — estimated at $60,000 — to move this house. They had talked about it and thought it would make a fine oceanfront museum somewhere, that the public could go to. It could be filled with photos of other award winning homes along the beach from that era. And that you'd actually be in one would make the experience very real.

What a wonderful idea. The town loved it, and they volunteered two town board members, Steve Kenny and Linda Kabet, to shepherd the project through. Pearlroth said that he would give the Town a year to make the move. And he would extend it if they needed more time. The town immediately decided that a great place for it would be at the back of Pike's Beach. All they would need would be the cooperation of the Mayor of the Village of West Hampton Dunes.

It is fair to say, I think, that Gary Vegliante has developed his village, since its founding twenty years ago, as if it were a private enclave. There are gateposts where you enter

Struck Blind

The Truth About Viagra and Other Forms of Self Abuse

By Dan Rattiner

Now here's a fine how-do-you-do. Viagra may cause blindness. There have been at least 48 documented cases in the last year where men have taken Viagra and then have gone blind and researchers are looking into the connection. This news was announced last Friday. It ran front page on many papers.

Forgetting the fact that going blind when you are about to have sex can be a very disruptive thing for both yourself and your partner — hey, where did you go? — isn't this a big plus for the religious far right?

They have preached all sorts of odd things from the pulpit. One of them is that masturbation causes blindness. And we've all heard this and sat there and gone yeah, right, masturbation causes blindness. Apparently it's right there in the Bible. And now it turns out that maybe not only masturbation but all sexual stimulants cause blindness.

I think right now there are about forty million American men taking Viagra. Some do it because they are old and it gives them an extra kick. Some do it because they are young and it gives them an extra kick. Hooray for Viagra.

Keep in mind that Viagra didn't originally come on the market because it was a sex-enhancing drug. It came on the market to treat some other illness, I forget which one. A skin rash or something. But women took it and nothing happened, but when men took it, the rash didn't get better but they looked down and hello, the flagpole was up.

I suppose at first nobody made the connection. I mean there are all sorts of odd things that have been known to get the flagpole up. A high heel shoe. A dog barking. A red Corvette. Just getting up in the morning. But pretty soon the researchers started collecting data. Not the Corvette, but the Corvette and the Viagra. Not the dog barking but the dog barking and Viagra. After a while, they figured it all out.

Until now, the only serious consequence you had to worry about with Viagra was an erection that wouldn't go away. It's right there in the warnings on the bottle. IF AN ERECTION LASTS MORE THAN FOUR HOURS, CALL YOUR DOCTOR. Or an ambulance, or the police, or the Guinness Book of World Records. Just somebody, anybody with some kind of tool, a hammer or a pliers, that will make the thing go down.

MANY PRIZES AT POTATOHAMPTON TOMORROW

By Dan Rattiner

This Saturday morning promptly at 9:30 a.m., a gun will sound on Ocean Road in Bridgehampton and hundreds of runners will be off on the annual Dan's Papers Potatohampton 10K Minithon through the potato fields of Sagaponack and Bridgehampton. There are ocean views along the route. The race passes horse farms, farm stands, potato farms, large mansions, even an old New England windmill.

Everyone is welcome. You can either participate in the event or come down to the start/finish line and as a spectator just root for those that do. We have trophies for the winning man and woman overall, $150 gift certificates for the two winners overall, a category for kids 13-19, for ages 20-29, 30-39, 40-49, 50-59, 60-69, 70-79 and 80+. And we also have prizes for the winners, gift certificates, in both men's and women's categories in every age group, twenty in all, and trophies for every category, too. We also have second and third place ribbons in all categories. And everybody who enters and completes the course gets a CERTIFICATE OF COMPLETION suitable for framing. There is also the first annual "Spud Run" this year for kids under 12. And the first 350 entries get free t-shirts.

You will find the start/finish line about three hundred yards down Ocean Road to the south of the Bridgehampton monument. You can go to the grounds of the Bridgehampton Presbyterian Church on Main Street for stretching and warm up before the race beginning at 8 am, and you can also register for the race if you have not already done so at that location. Preregistration can be done on Friday of this week the day before the race at either the World Gym in Hampton Bays or the Omni Health and Racquet Club in Southampton or

Here is what we have to look forward to. Half the State of Florida goes blind as a bat. Half the City of Las Vegas goes blind as a bat. Nightclubs and bars hire chauffeurs to take people home — we'll send your car along later, if you think it will do you any good given your condition. This is not going to be pretty.

As I said, it is a victory for the far right. Preaching from the pulpit will go up a few decibels. The Bible says you must not abuse yourself or you will be struck blind. Confess your sins. Pray for forgiveness. And all these blind people will stand up and say Halleluyah.

Blind people — LEGITIMATELY blind people — will insist that distinctions be made between them and those who became blind from the shameful practice of abusing themselves (either manually or with the little pill). The little red stripe at the bottom of the white canes will be proof that they have done nothing wrong. On the bottom of the Viagra abusers canes, the stripe will be scarlet. The Scarlet Stripe.

People blind with the scarlet stripe will not be allowed to use the handicapped parking spaces. And they must wear an ankle bracelet. People blind with the scarlet stripe will only be allowed to have seeing eye dogs from nine to five. People with the scarlet stripe will, of course, be going to Hell.

Many other things in the Bible will now, by parallel assumption, be therefore true. I told you this is a victory for the far right. Only eat fish on Friday. Burn all the evolution books. Tell all the homosexuals to go straight or burn in hell. Same for those who have abortions. Straighten up or you will be struck by lightning and turned into a pillar of salt. Never ever covet thy neighbor's wife. Not even in your thoughts.

Of course this Viagra blindness thing could turn out just to be a fluke. Don't eat fluke. Or any other raw fish. Look what happened to the Japanese.

FACT is the Foundation for the Advancement of Cardiac Therapies, based at Columbia University Hospital in Manhattan.

The race is great fun. This is the 27th annual renewal of this event, so it is about as old as the New York Marathon, and it certainly is the oldest run on the East End.

The chief sponsor for this year's race is Prudential Douglas Elliman Real Estate. Other sponsors include the Bridgehampton

National Bank and the Hain Celestial Group. Before the race, runners will receive many gifts from these sponsors and others. There will be Hain Carrot Sticks, discount coupons from J Tortorella Custom Gunite Pools, Bodywedge Exercise Mats, perfume samples from Adrienne Vittadini, dining cards worth $10 from Jeff and Eddy's in Sag Harbor, baked goods from Cucina Di Baldi, Gatorade and Aquafina Water from Pepsi Bottling, Fig Newtons from Nabisco, Vitamin samples from Centrum Vitamins, warmups and cool downs to be led by Jim Wharton, who has worked with the New York Rangers, the 1988 Olympic Team and the New York Yankees. Nancy Kouris of World Gym in Hampton Bays will also be there, offering a more extended warm

The presentation and announcement of the winners will take place in the recreation hall behind the Presbyterian Church on Main Street. The times of all the winners will be posted, and will stay posted in the entrance lobby at Dan's Papers beginning on Monday morning, remaining up for the entire week. Enjoy the race.

We would very much like to thank numerous organizations for their efforts and cooperation in making the race a success. Thank you Southampton Town Recreation Department, Bridgehampton Fire Department, Bridgehampton Ambulance, and Southampton Town Police for all your help. We could not do this event without you.

Snowbirds

Egrets, Canadian Geese, Mallard Ducks and Summerpeople

By Emily J Weitz

There are those who are so loyal to the East End that they brave the icy roads of winter, the snowdrifts coating the dunes, the seductive but fiercely cold waves crashing on the shore. They warm the lonely bar stools and walk the desolate beaches. Those noble souls then bask in the summer with a feeling of deservedness, as if they paid their dues and now had earned their right to sunshine.

Then there are those who go from summer to summer, dodging the biting winter winds for sunnier shores. They are the egrets, whose delicate white necks would freeze and fracture in the bitter cold. They are the mallard ducks, whose wings flap them in V formations down past the old Mason-Dixon Line by the Christmas season. They are the tulips and the lilies who feign death as frost hunts them down, only to revive in springtime.

And there are the travelers. We are not the typical Hamptons summer fare. Yes, we avoid the harsh winters of this blistery tip of Long Island by strapping on our silver wings and descending South, but we do not manage this on trust funds. We are not in the city toiling with the masses to return summer weekends when we can squeeze a breath of fresh air out of our busy schedules. We represent a different breed. We survive from bartending gig to summer camp counselor job. We are your nannies, your waiters, your caddies. And we are back.

Where have we been, you ask? Where have we not been? There is a world of travelers that is unknown to the stationery folk. The traveler's life holds a culture all its own. We hop from hostel to guest house, from hammock on the beach to tent in the woods. We meet each other accompanied by the cool trumpet of Miles Davis, sipping watermelon shakes on hot lazy mornings. Firsthand accounts of life as an Israeli soldier are traded for promises that all of America doesn't back Bush. I learn how to correctly sip yerba mate from an

SWAP A FERRARI FOR A CIVIC WITH A BEACH PASS?

By David Lion Rattiner

One of the wonderful things about being a local in the Hamptons is the ability to obtain a resident beach sticker. All you have to do is walk up to village or town hall, show them your license and your registration and voila, they hook you up with a gorgeous beach sticker that bears the powerful word "resident." You then place this beautiful sticker onto the back window of your car and at that moment, almost everything in your life goes peaceful. For this sticker will allow you to park un-ticketed at a Hamptons beach. I got to be honest, it is one hell of a feeling.

On the other hand, you've got the non-resident stickers. These are sort of the lower class stickers that no one really wants but still get because they do the trick. However, a resident sticker, in comparison to a non-resident sticker, is like comparing a pair of Gucci sunglasses to a pair of Wal-mart brand sunglasses. They both serve the same function, but one is just better for some reason. The Village of East Hampton only issues 2,500 of these non-resident beach stickers a season. Not only are these stickers difficult to obtain, they are also going to run you $225 a pop, unlike the resident stickers, which are free.

The social structure pertaining to how these beach stickers are given out is really quite fascinating because it is not a division of the rich and the not-so-rich, like it is in most exclusive situations. No, this is not the Maidstone Club. Instead, it is a division between people that were here first and the people who showed up not quite on time.

This situation has left many of the non-resident rich out here angry. After all, how can you justify denying somebody a beach sticker, or anything for that matter, if they are willing to pay three hundred thousand dollars to rent a Argentinian's straw. I hear what it was like in West Germany when the Berlin Wall came down. We sit in backpackers' paradises, anywhere, Earth. This, the vacation season, is our work-your-butt-off-season, and then we flee the winter to travel on the cheap around India, Southeast Asia, Central and South America, Africa, Australia, and Europe.

This winter, the squirrels carried their acorns in the packed pouches of their cheeks and the swans huddled close together in Hook Pond in East Hampton. I watched the leaves abandon their branches and land, crisp and dry, on the hardening earth. I watched the geese leave freezing-over ponds. I watched the coats on the horses grow thick. And then I, too, packed my backpack with a bikini, hiking boots, and a tent, and I bought an open-ended ticket to San Jose, Costa Rica, to discover a country I had never seen and a culture in which I had never immersed myself.

I spent the winter working in the Costa Rican rainforest, studying at the University of Life Experience. My muscles, which had melted into the chair of my office in summer months, learned to wield a machete. My hands learned to dig into dirt. My heart learned not to stop when I encountered a spider the size of a peach pit or a scorpion whose purple organs glowed through its clear skin. I learned how to care for sapling trees that would someday be planted in meadows that had been deforested. I learned how to shell coffee beans and use the cases as mulch. I never thought I'd know where cinnamon came from until I harvested it myself, lugging the branches of cinnamon trees, leaning the heavy branch against my leg, scraping the bark, and watching as pungent cinnamon dust rose around my hunched shoulders. I taught fourth graders that writing doesn't have to have guidelines or rules, that a pen can mean freedom.

I curled up at night under tin roofs while the egrets outside nested in almond trees. I heard them flapping their wings as the sun rose, and I winked at them as we remembered the nest we left behind: the lovely East End of Long Island, that lay dormant under a dusting of snow.

Emails poured in from home, loaded with attachments depicting the snowy winter I had avoided. I responded with my own photos, downloaded in breezy Internet cafes, of puma paw prints on the jungle floor and wide-mouthed crocodiles with stony eyes. But their emails thinned out as spring crept up on Long Island and the rainy season fell full-force upon Costa Rica. The tulips poked up through defrosting soil in Bridgehampton backyards, and the raindrops pounded so hard on the tin roof above my head that they leapt off the metal and fell a second time. The egrets and I raised our heads and heard the beckoning call home.

I landed in the Hamptons as baby ducklings were hatching, under the cherry blossoms petals as they began to fall. Spring skirts were swinging in the breeze, and my calves emerged bronze beneath them. Now, as I drive down the wide, curving roads past Georgica Pond, I slow down to watch the birds landing, wings spread, on smooth water. An egret seems to arch its neck towards me, droplets of water glistening in a brightening spring sun. We wink. We've ridden together on the backs of the seasons, summer to summer, in a winged migration.

Going Fishing With Mundus for the 30th Anniversary of Jaws

By Debbie Tuma

It was just like old times, as Captain Frank Mundus stood in the stern of his boat, the Crickett II, and joked with local Montauk captains last weekend, at Star Island Yacht Club in Montauk. Only the last time Mundus had done that was about 15 years ago, when he retired from 50 years of shark fishing off Montauk waters, and moved all the way to the big island of Hawaii.

Now the surly captain, who is known as "Monster Man," and, thought to be the role model for the character "Quint" in the movie, Jaws, is back in town to celebrate the 30-year anniversary of this blockbuster movie, which is considered to be one of the scariest films ever made in Hollywood.

In honor of this landmark year, Mundus, 80, has written his third book, an autobiography with the catchy title, 50 Years A Hooker, which he will soon be signing when it comes out the end of June. He has also taken his old boat, the Crickett II, up from its present home in North Carolina, to begin fishing regular shark charters out of Star Island Yacht Club, from now through July 19, when he returns to Hawaii.

Over Father's Day weekend, July 17 and 18, Mundus will also be participating in the Star Island Shark Tournament, which is preceded by a captain's meeting the night of June 16.

Wearing his trademark gold earring, his captain's hat, and a yellow "Monster Man" t-shirt, Mundus greeted his old captain friends and other guests as he stood next to a mounted trophy of his record 3,427-pound great white shark, hanging from the bridge to the stern. Around Mundus's neck was a two-inch white tooth from this shark, made into a gold necklace.

"I caught this shark off Montauk Point in the summer of 1986, and it was the biggest one ever caught on rod and reel," he told curious fans who came over to the boat. "It took us about an hour and a half to get him to the boat,

WHAT GETS BOARDED UP AT THE COLLEGE NOW?

By Alan-Michael Braverman

The battle to keep Southampton College alive is over. Southampton College held its last commencement on Sunday May 22nd for 461 students, amidst a smattering of uncertainty, unhappiness, weariness, joy, jubilation and loads of "I told you so's." The history of the college remains to be written at some future date. For now, all that will comprise the "New Southampton College" and continue Long Island University's presence on the East End of Long Island is: WLIU, the radio station, the expanding Graduate School, the Continuing Education School and the hugely successful Children's School. This will be compressed to one or two buildings by summer's end.

The familiar gated front entrance may still be the placeholder for the Southampton College sign. However, new locking security devices have already been put in place, as if to say "Go away" or "Gone Fishing."

In September a new sign will hang over the marine science center. It may say something as simple as "Stony Brook Marine Science Center at Southampton." Some 60 plus students from Southampton College have already transferred to Stony Brook to finish their marine science education along with the three former Southampton College faculty members who have been hired by Stony Brook to continue teaching in the program on site here.

The campus bookstore is closed. Indeed, if you attempt to go to the bookstore's web site, you'll find it has vanished. It is a swift and startling validation of the college's demise. This simple erasure has created a large void in the memorabilia business that the college alumni association may try and fill in the future.

The dining facilities in Wood Hall will be open until early August. There are some undergraduate and graduate classes being offered on the campus this summer and these students will need a place to eat. Attendees at and another two hours to put a tear rope around him."

One of the long-time captains greeting Mundus was Harry Clemenz, who caught the largest blue marlin, in 1986, of 175 pounds, on his former boat, "The Tempo." Clemenz was the captain, while the fisherman who caught this fish was named Billy Sweedler, off Connecticut.

Clemenz recalled, "I first met Frank in 1955, when he pulled up alongside my Dad's boat, the Ginger, at Joe's Dock. I was mating for my Dad at the time, and I thought Frank was a little wacko, with his shark tooth necklace and his red and green painted toenails. He painted them to match the red light on the port side of the boat and the green light on the starboard side of the boat. He was also one of the first men to wear an earring back then, and he took a lot of kidding for it."

As they reminisced about fishing stories, Clemenz said, "I think it's exciting to have Frank back for this 30th anniversary. After the first Jaws movie in 1975, many people came out to Montauk to catch sharks, and it gave a big boost to the fishing industry here."

Also on board the Cricket II was its new owner, Capt. Joe DiBella, of North Carolina, who sailed the boat up the coast to meet Mundus in Montauk. "I bought this boat from Frank in 1993, after he'd retired, and I've wanted it ever since I was eight years old," he said. "It was the first charter boat I was ever on, when my Dad took me fishing with Frank as a kid. I told Frank back then that I would own his boat some day."

DiBella said the Cricket II is specially built to ride the waves and catch the big fish. It's a 42-foot Tiffany Chesapeake style, built for durability and stability. After Frank Mundus leaves on July 19, DiBella plans to stay on at Star Island Yacht Club to take up to five-person charters the rest of the year.

Looking over his old boat, Mundus recalled, "I had this built in 1946, and I started fishing in Montauk in 1951. Back then, no one was fishing for sharks—they considered it garbage fish." Mundus said he caught his first shark by accident—and that started his 50-year career in what became known as "monster fishing."

He caught his first 3,000-pound white shark off the coast of an Amagansett bathing beach in 1960, which he claims "became the opening scene of Jaws." During his long and notorious career, he also got world fame for harpooning a record 4500-pound great white shark, in 1964, which still hangs in Salivar's bar in Montauk.

Mundus is convinced that all this led up to the creation of the movie Jaws.

"Peter Benchley fished with us in the 1960s and he asked a lot of questions," Mundus quipped. "While we were out one day a shark bit the boat and broke off about five teeth. This scene was also in the movie. I think I am Captain Quint. If you don't believe me, just come fishing with me and watch me operate, and then watch the movie."

Mundus said, "After this movie came out, everyone thought they were a shark fisherman. But nobody knew anything about how to catch sharks, so that's why I wrote my first book, Sportfishing For Sharks." His second book was called, "Monster Man," which he signed last Sunday, at a special signing at Star Island Yacht Club. He wrote his recent book, "50 Years a Hooker," with his wife, Jenny, and they self-published it.

When Mundus left Montauk, in 1990, he donated all his fishing equipment to the Montauk Village Improvement Society, which auctioned it off. Mundus is also being featured in an upcoming documentary on the Discovery Channel this August, which is narrated by Roy Scheider.

While standing on his boat last weekend, Mundus was approached by one fan, Ralph Intindole, of Syosset, who had driven out to meet him and get an autograph.

"I heard he was out here, and I wanted to meet him," he said. "He's a legend, and if you want to know anything about shark fishing, he's the man."

Mundus was also surrounded by his family—his daughter Tammy and his son-in-law, Dale Greene, of East Hampton. When asked what it was like to grow up as one of three daughters of Frank Mundus, Tammy laughed, "I don't know, I never saw him. He got up early every day to fish, and when he came home, he was so tired, he nodded off in the chair."

Although fishing charters with Mundus are booked up through July 19, he will be available at the Star Island Yacht Club to answer questions or sign books every day, and for information, call the club at 631-668-5052.

Dude, Where's My Road

East Hampton Trustees Think Some May Have Vanished

By David Stoll

The observer and commentator, David Stoll

From time to time, the Suffolk County government creates official, certified "tax maps," which set forth every road and every property line in each town and village throughout the county. For parcels owned by government entities, the tax maps state which entity owns the land (the County, one of the towns, one of the villages). One of the Trustees for the Town of East Hampton recently found an old tax map and official correspondence indicating that certain parcels, which now are reflected as owned by the Town of East Hampton, actually have dirt roads running through them which were then owned by the Trustees. It is not clear at the moment whether the roads still exist or, if they do, who owns them.

A bit of history may be useful. In Colonial times, King James II's Governor for much of Long Island, including what we now think of

as the East End, granted certain rights to the freeholders (landowners) of the East End. The so-called Dongan Patents (named after the Governor, Thomas Dongan) created the boundaries that define the East Hampton and Southampton Townships, and provided to the freeholders perpetual rights to the beaches and all bodies of water, as well as certain inland property so as to ensure access. The Dongan Patents also created the Trustees of Trustees, our courts consistently have recognized the continuing validity of the Dongan Patents. So, the Trustees continue to exist (now elected by East End citizens), and no Village or Town Board has authority over beaches, bodies of water or road owned by the Trustees for the people. The common beach-use laws passed by towns and villages (operation times, dog rules, use of vehicles, etc.) have all been approved by the Trustees.

Over the centuries, the Trustees have built roads across much of their property, usually on an east-west and north-south axis. For example, according to President of the Southampton Trustees Scott Strough, Sagg Road, Scuttle Hole Road, Noyac Path, Old Sag Harbor Road and Middle Line Highway (among many others) were originally created by the Southampton Trustees for the benefit of the freeholders. These roads and many other Trustee roads in Southampton and East Hampton were eventually brought into the highway systems of the Townships, so they are now owned and maintained by the Townships. Other roads, particularly certain beach access roads (often designated by a letter), remain owned by the Trustees.

Also, over the years, the Trustees have

East Hampton and Southampton to care for and manage these property rights for the benefit of the freeholders. To have a sense of the size of these gifts, consider that in Southampton alone, the Dongan Patent decreed over 25,000 acres of land.

Even after the War for Independence ended and early Americans established democratically elected village, town, state and federal gov-

allowed private owners to acquire much of their inland property, with the proviso that the roads themselves remain owned by the Trustees. That is, a property owner may own several acres of land, but the public has a right to use a road that cuts through the land. There have been times when the Trustees have had to move their roads, as part of a deal with landowners or because a landowner bought property without realizing that the land included a Trustee road.

Which brings us back to East Hampton and the missing dirt roads. The East Hampton Trustees have a policy of ensuring that certain of their roads are not developed but rather are kept in a natural state and allowed to evolve as nature dictates. This includes the missing dirt roads. What is unclear, and under investigation, is whether the Trustees once conveyed the dirt roads to the Town for some reason, or whether the County has omitted the roads from the tax maps by mistake—either because of poor recordkeeping or perhaps because the roads have become overgrown and the county surveyor did not know the roads exist. Town and Trustee representatives are working on the inquiry, and future tax maps will be corrected if appropriate.

Could the same thing happen in Southampton? According to Mr. Strough, probably not. The Southampton Trustees have conducted an inventory over the past decade to make sure that they are aware of what roads are still within their jurisdiction, what roads have been moved for whatever reason, and what roads are now under control of the Town highway department. The Trustees also work closely with the Town, including the Town Planning Board, when applications for development are proposed, to make sure that the Trustees' rights are not infringed. While Mr. Strough said that there have been very rare occasions when it was determined after the fact that a Trustee road exists on private property without appropriate documentation (requiring relocation of the road), the Southampton Trustees' internal auditing procedures and vigilance have largely paid off.

Oddly enough, some time ago, as certain roads were being built by the Town and others were being taken over by the Towns from the Trustees, our own Dan Rattiner took it upon himself to name some of the roads. He drew maps with these names on them and some of them have stuck. I will leave it to the reader to try to figure out which road names are his. Meantime, I would like to suggest to the East Hampton Trustees that they take a visit to Dan's property to see if he has the missing roads there.

place from Memorial Day to Labor Day? Technically they aren't residents, but what they are paying for a rental is three times the amount most locals paid for their houses twenty or thirty years ago.

Dan's Papers feels terrible about this situation and we are going to do everything we can to make this right. That is why we and our team of lawyers and research analysts have worked out a plan so that you renters can go to a public beach instead of having to deal with your miserable private beach.

We here at Dan's Papers, and especially this reporter, have noticed an extreme increase in the number of Ferrari's that are on the road this summer. After extensive research, we have noticed that a majority of these Ferrari's do not have beach stickers. If you are one of these people that own a Ferrari but do not have a beach sticker, you are in luck. This reporter, along with other members of the staff of Dan's Papers, are willing to trade your lousy, non-beach sticker Ferrari, with our superb state-of-the-art local vehicles that sport the glorious resident beach sticker that your heart desires. More specifically, we currently have one black, 2005 Honda Civic (mine) that will meet your entire beach parking needs. We will happily trade this vehicle for one of any of your Ferrari's.

Another way to get a sticker, our research team at Dan's Papers has discovered, is to be a lifeguard for the town or the village. Then you can get a beach sticker free of charge. So, the lifeguard season is beginning and ocean life-

"You got a real nice look," the voice says. "How old are you? Are you strong? You think you could rip that shirt off of you? That's a nice body. You work out? I can tell." The young man in the wood-paneled basement is uncomfortable, maybe a bit naive — but he complies. Then it happens. We realize this is a jean commercial. Calvin Klein Jeans to be exact. And we are left uneasy, maybe offended, and likely titillated in some way. One thing is for sure — we never forgot it. This is the genius of Calvin Klein. The man who made denim high fashion and convinced us that less is more has hammered his name deep into the cultural lexicon through brilliantly daring marketing and sophisticated yet minimalist clothes. Media watchdogs eventually pulled the 1995 commercial along with the entire campaign that featured young boys and girls giving various uncomfortable interviews in the same ominous basement. Fortunately for Klein, everyone was talking about it.

Controversy seems to directly coincide with most of Calvin Klein's advertising and imagery. A 15-year-old Brooke Shields' proclamation that "nothing" comes between her and her Calvins in 1980 ignited over two decades of explosive advertising. From the oddly avant-garde "Obsession" perfume commercials no one understood, to the Avedon-shot CKbe ads that became the center of the public outcry against fashion's promotion of "Heroin Chic," Klein's uncanny ability to ride the cutting edge remained intact. His advertising brought supermodel Kate Moss into the public eye, and placed Mark Wahlberg, then rapper Marky Mark, into the role of international sex symbol through a series of images of the buff actor clad only in white briefs. In 1999, pictures of little boys and girls playing on a sofa in only their undergarments for Klein's children's line brought yet another round of criticism. Perhaps due to his previous track record, the public saw the ads as exploitative and Klein recalled them within 24 hours despite his spokesperson's assurance that the campaign was designed "to capture the same warmth and spontaneity that you find in a family snapshot."

Calvin Klein may be misunderstood, and he definitely knows how to get people talking, but like most successful businessmen, things began more quietly. Born in the Bronx on November 19th, 1942, Klein recognized his interest in fashion at a young age. By the time he entered the classrooms of the New York High School of Art and Design, he had already taught himself to sketch and sew. His passions led him to Manhattan's Fashion Institute of Technology before moving on to bigger and better things. The fashion giant that is Calvin Klein sportswear started out as a coat company. He and childhood friend Barry Schwartz launched their line of men's and women's coats under the heading "Calvin Klein Limited" in 1968. Klein's designs and Schwartz's business savvy was a recipe for success. Bonwit Teller placed a sizable order, and it wasn't long before the fashion world began to recognize talent in Klein's clean lines and sophisticated simplicity. By the 1970s, their little coat company had expanded to include women's sportswear apparel and a complete ready-to-wear collection. Klein's designs stayed their minimalist course maintaining neutral colors and avoiding over-the-top flash. He was soon a fixture in the fashion industry, but Klein's next idea, coupled with the now infamous Brooke Shields commercial, propelled him to the level of household name. The concept of marketing designer jeans at reasonable prices forever changed the fashion world, and the buzz on the Shields campaign made equal waves for advertisers. In one swoop, the climate got a lot hotter.

What followed was nothing short of a coup. Klein made underwear fashionable, continued to expand his men's and women's wear from bathing suits to business suits, created a cosmetics and beauty line, released fragrances including the first unisex perfume (Ck One), won awards, and brought sex and sexuality into the mainstream. Years of sizzling television and print ads have made an indelible mark on the collective world psyche and helped name Klein as one of Time Magazine's 25 Most Influential People in America.

Calvin Klein also happens to be among those influential Americans who reside here in the Hamptons. He's a long time resident, but last summer, the purchase of his giant new home on 10 acres off Meadow Lane and the party to celebrate it, were the talk of the town. The castle-like mansion Klein reportedly bought for just under $30 million and renamed "Elysium" from "Dragon's Head," was once the largest house in the Hamptons (before Ira Rennert squashed its record) at 45,000 square feet and 60 bedrooms. Elysium has a shark grotto and an English Pub within its walls, and attendees of the party reported a sexually charged atmosphere complete with go-go boys and cage dancers in the spirit of all those great ads. The guests were many in number and the waiters were even more so. It along Dune Road, the only road there is in the village. And there is no parking in front of the beachfront houses anywhere along that road. At the end of Dune Road, where it reaches Moriches Inlet, there is, unfortunately from the Village's point of view, a beachfront County Park that pre-existed their village, Cupsogue Beach, at which all residents of Suffolk County are welcome. People can come there, park, change in changing rooms, eat food at the County-run beach cafe, and sit out on the beach protected by County Lifeguards.

Just in the back of the beach, where the County property ends, and where the Village property begins, Vegliante has built a two-story tower with a police surveillance building on the top. It looks exactly like something out of the Soviet Gulag — a post up high with policemen with revolvers and binoculars looking out over the entire village. You can see from up here all the way back to the entry gate, and just down below the entire facility of the County's beach, including everybody on the beach.

seems somehow appropriate for the man who was once a regular at Studio 54. Klein has been married twice, most recently to socialite and photographer Kelly Klein with whom he has a daughter, Marci, but today he is regarded as one of New York's and probably America's most eligible bachelors. By default, Elysium is now the ultimate bachelor pad.

In 2003, Calvin Klein sold his company to

A four wheel drive Village patrol car runs up and down Dune Road practically all the time, and if you drive into the Village — they can't prevent you — and even stop your car for minute along Dune Road, a police officer will appear and either give you a ticket or tell you to move on or both. Meanwhile, along the ocean, except for the Southampton Town owned Pike's beach (which has a 210-car parking lot), there is virtually no access from the road to the ocean. There are a few boardwalks between all the newly reconstructed homes, but there is no place to park on the street to get you near them.

As for the newly constructed homes, they have all been built on the lots intended for the small cottages that had been there before. The Village allows very large buildings to be built on these small lots now. And the result is that they are so close together one to the other that the effect is not Hamptons so much as Queens. And that's the way it is.

And so, Steve Kenny and Linda Kabot went to see Gary Vegliante, to get a building permit to locate the Double Diamond at the back of Pike's Beach. Now what do you think the chances were that Vegliante would like to have more members of the general public marching in and out of the Village of West Hampton Dunes to enjoy an architectural museum?

"We are now looking at four or five other locations along the beach that the town owns," Ms. Kabot said after her conversation with Mr. Vegliante. "I am sure we will find another suitable location. We just bought the old Hot Dog Beach."

"We have a right to put pavillions on our property," said Steve Kenny. "The negotiations will continue."

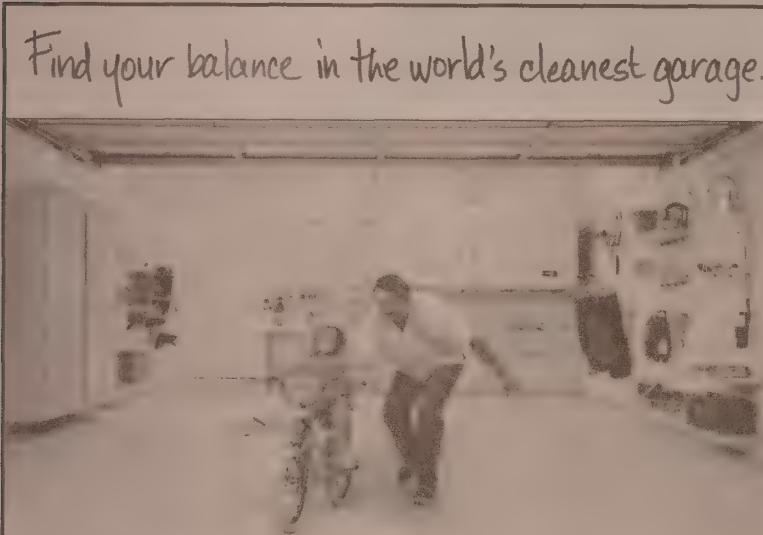

Meanwhile, Steve Levy, the supervisor of Suffolk County, has offered an alternate site at Cupsogue Beach.

So now we have this bump in the road. Now there's a new idea for Dune Road in the Village of West Hampton Dunes. It would sure slow down all those hot rodders heading out to Cupsogue Beach. On the other hand, it might negatively affect the Village coffers.

Philip Van Heusen, but remains very much involved with the design and shape of the business. He's said to be a tough boss who obviously gets results. Nicknamed "Calvin the Conqueror," Klein's business earns billions each year, and his knowledge of consumer psychology, current and upcoming trends, overall image and marketing, and his adherence to his signature style has made him an icon. In 1993 he was named America's Best Designer and he sits on several committees including the Council of Fashion Designers of America. The summation of Calvin Klein's design style can be best understood from his own quote, "I've never been one to see women in ruffles and all kinds of fanciful apparel. To me it's just silly." The man knows what he's doing.

Who's Here

By Emily J Weitz

All over the world, there are people in need of both good doctors and strong advocates. One person who possesses both of these qualities is Dr. Blake Kerr of East Hampton, who maintains a practice here. He has gone above and beyond a doctor's usual call of duty, and has become both a voice and a healing hand to people in need worldwide.

Blake Kerr was born and raised in Ithaca, NY. He attended Dartmouth College, where he majored in Biochemistry and Creative Writing, and then he headed to SUNY Buffalo to study for a career in medicine, specializing in public health, nutrition, and community service. After graduating from Medical School, Dr. Kerr went to do his residency at St. Vincent's Hospital in New York City, and in the course of things, he became acquainted with the Hamptons. As a former Creative Writing major, he felt the tug of the peace and quiet of these sandy shores. And so, after his residency, he moved to East Hampton to work on a book and to work at a clinic. From this base, he began working on projects around the world, which he has continued to this day, part-time, while maintaining his practice here.

How this came about is a story in itself. After eight years of medical school, Blake and a friend decided to climb Mt. Everest. In their sneakers, and with little equipment, the two young men reached 22,500 feet before they turned around to begin their descent. It was 1987, a tumultuous time to be arriving in Lhasa, the capital of Tibet. (Of course, the atrocious violations of Tibetan human rights by the Chinese regime still occur today.) Dr. Kerr entered Lhasa in the midst of riots, and witnessed Chinese forces shooting women, children, and monks in the street. He met victims and started to treat them, buying medical supplies with the help of financial donations from other travelers. This was his full-force initiation into human rights activism.

He found the brutality of the Chinese regime in Tibet so fierce, with tactics such as forced abortion, infanticide, and forced sterilization, that the wounded, whom he hoped to treat, had gone into hiding. So Dr. Kerr had to secretly arrange to meet them. After a short time, he was discovered and arrested by Chinese soldiers. They blamed him for starting the riots, but he snuck out of his interrogation, spending two more weeks treating wounded Tibetans before leaving the country. Once home, Dr. Kerr testified before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee as a human rights activist, exposing the horrors that were occurring in Tibet. His commitment to Tibet continued, as he returned again and again to treat victims, until 1999, when he was restricted entry into the country by the Chinese government.

But Dr. Kerr's commitment to human rights was far from over.

Dr. Kerr meets and talks with top-ranking Khmer Rouge officers as well as victims of the Khmer Rouge.

In 2000, he went to Cambodia, which as a country had been ruled by foreigners since the 13th century, when Thailand, then Siam, invaded, colonized, and then brutalized the Khmer people, occupying their soil for 600 years. When independence finally came, Pol Pot rose to power, and his Khmer Rouge party inflicted unspeakable acts on the Cambodian people, including the displacement and murder of 2.5 million citizens.

Dr. Kerr's purpose in traveling to Cambodia was to explore the question: How does Cambodia deal with genocide?

Dr. Kerr approached this topic in an open-minded way, by not only interviewing tortured prisoners, but also investigating the perpetrators. He didn't know then how close to these perpetrators he was about to get.

When Dr. Kerr arrived in Cambodia, he met a doctor who had lost his leg to a land mine, and as a result, stopped practicing. Dr. Kerr went to the pharmacy and bought a huge bag of medicine and bandages, costing about $37, and convinced the doctor to start doing house calls again. They did house visits together in the jungle and became friends. Then Dr. Kerr learned that this doctor was related to Ta Mok, who was the #1 general in the Khmer Rouge, responsible for countless deaths. Instead of running in the opposite direction, Dr. Kerr saw this as an opportunity to shed light on a side of the Khmer Rouge atrocities that had been left in the dark. That's when the idea for his documentary, The Angry Skies: A Cambodian Journey, came into being.

In this documentary, which was shown at the Hamptons Film Festival in 2004 and will be shown this summer at the Ross School, Dr. Kerr meets and talks with top-ranking Khmer Rouge officers as well as victims of the Khmer Rouge. He interviews people humbly and adapts to cultural differences gracefully. He boldly sneaks hidden cameras into meetings with men who have murdered to document their stories. And by understanding the Khmer Rouge perspective, he is able to learn about the roots of this devastating regime. When Dr. Kerr asked Ta Mok about life before the Khmer Rouge rose to power, he learned of his perspective on Nixon and the American bombing, which became known as The Angry Skies. Dr. Kerr's documentary shows how these American bombs and land mines contributed to the rise of the Khmer Rouge by creating a feeling of distrust among the Cambodian people for their own government, which was not protecting them. The Khmer Rouge spoke out against this government and was strongly anti-American. Thus, Pol Pot easily recruited members who would eventually contribute to this genocide.

With all of this human rights activism, one would think that Dr. Kerr didn't have much time for anything else. But he was always back and forth between Asia and the United States, guard tests are going to be held throughout the year. All you have to do is pass the lifeguard test, get your CPR certification and get a job as a lifeguard, and you can park on a beach for as long as your little heart is content.

The research team has also discovered a speakeasy in East Hampton that can hook you up with a counterfeit beach sticker. All you have to do is go to the back ally behind the movie theater in East Hampton. There is a white door on your left. Knock five times quickly and a man will answer the door and ask you for the password. Just so you know, the password I am about to tell you is top secret and will probably get me killed, but I am a servant to the community and it is my duty to tell you. The password to the secret speak easy that sells counterfeit beach stickers in East Hampton is "these aren't the beach stickers you're looking for."

Another way to get those lovely beach stickers on your car is to marry somebody that lives here full time. Our research team has also learned that most people are up for this, as long as there is a prenuptial agreement, of course. You can go to the grand opening of the "Beach-Sticker Wedding Chapel" this weekend and for only $39.95 you can get married that day, as well as pick up your beach parking sticker, all in one location. Just don't forget to show them your receipt for the early season discount.

Interestingly enough, many of the real estate moguls of the Hamptons have learned that they can sell lousy property in a section of the East Hampton Dump for high prices because they are zoned for residents. Although nobody currently lives at the East Hampton Dump, real estate moguls have developed fifteen square foot super-dooper-mini-mcmansions that are completely up to building code and village code inspections. These fifteen square foot houses will run you around a hundred thousand dollars.

They may be at the dump, they may be kind of smelly, they may have no water, they may get accidentally destroyed by a bulldozer, but they will get you a resident beach sticker.

MONTAUK HARBOR FESTIVAL JUNE 11

By Joe Werkmeister

There will be an abundance of activities for the second annual Montauk Harbor Festival slated for June 11th. Festivities range from rock climbing walls to live music to a chance at winning $10,000.

The festival, in the heart of Montauk

Harbor on West Lake Drive, started as an opportunity for residents to celebrate the Harbor and increase overall awareness.

Laraine Creegan, executive director of the Montauk Chamber of Commerce, said a lot of people don't know about the harbor.

Last year, the festival drew less than expected because of heavy rain. This year, a rain date is scheduled for June 12.

Events begin at 1 p.m. and last until 7 p.m. Montauk Harbor grew out of the vision of Carl Fisher, the man responsible for turning Miami Beach into a resort city. He dreamed

Just Cruisin'

Muscle Cars, Race Cars, Convertibles and Mustangs

By Avery Andon

Candy paint and chrome wheels glistened against the sun at the fourth annual Bonac Cruisers Car Club Show on Sunday. The Amagansett American Legion opened its expansive lawn to the classic cars in an effort to raise money for local families in distress, and to give proud car enthusiasts a chance to show off their precious pieces of automotive machinery.

Owners of the customized specialty cars were both young and old, brought together by an undying passion for pimped-out rides. Twenty-year-old Ben Staron purchased his 1966 Chevelle 300 Sedan when he was only thirteen and has spent the last seven years doing body work and personalizing the paint job himself. When asked what inspired him to purchase a car three years before being able to drive he said, "I had some money saved up and wanted a dirt bike, but my dad said getting a car would make me happier in the long run. Man, was he right!"

George Eldi of Lazy Point, Amagansett, introduced me to his bright yellow 1963 Dune Buggy featured in an episode of "All My Children" in the late eighties by chance when his uncle saw a film crew loitering on the beach. According to George, "The producers had rented some cheap buggy that couldn't handle soft-sand, and after seeing my uncle tearing down the beach, they asked to use his. He agreed and they started filming right then and there." The Dune Buggy has been in the Eldi family for over 37 years, and George had several old pictures on display of his father crashing down an East Hampton dune.

Argentinean native Raphael Repetur has been working on his 1969 Mach One Mustang for the last twenty-seven months, and the result is a burnt-orange beauty. He said the car was "all I wanted when I moved here from Argentina. Everybody has something they love and need in their life. I needed this car the moment I saw it."

One of the most jaw-dropping jewels on the lot was a cherry red 1968 Shelby GT 350 that Andrew Schaefer of East End Restoration rebuilt for a cool ninety grand. The car is one of four that were produced with a limited edition paint job, and everything down to the seat stitching looked immaculate. When the owner saw his magnificent car at the show, he asked Andrew if he could drive it right off the lot.

Another Bonac Cruiser named Jim Bradley actually let me hop in the driver's seat of his psychedelic blue 1969 SS Camaro, while he described how run down the car had been when he bought it five years ago. With great emotion he said, "The windows were put in by dum-dums, the top was all torn up. Basically, this car was a real basket case and I took it upon myself to bring out its full potential."

Walking through the show, I could tell who the owners of each car were. They stood in front of their cars with an air of confidence, and spoke energetically about the different makes, models, and after-market parts added. It was all smiles with classic rock blaring out of the 92.1 WLNG bus throughout the day, and the smell of burgers wafting through the air from the concession stand. The Bonac Cruisers are a truly dedicated bunch, using the cars they love to aid those in our community going through financial hardship due to unforeseen circumstances.

and back on the forefront, he was changing things as well. When Dr. Kerr returned from his first, life-altering experience in Tibet, he immersed himself in his first book, Sky Burial, based on traditions in Tibet. Then, after working at a clinic out here, he realized that this area of Long Island is actually underserved. People would try to see a doctor, but found they'd have to wait days or weeks until the doctor was free. Dr. Kerr wanted to establish a place where there was instant care. So, in 1997, he created the Wainscott Walk-In Clinic, where people can get same-day help.

Dr. Kerr lives in East Hampton and has two children, a son and a daughter. They have not yet made it to Asia with him, but his daughter's stuffed animal, Piglet, made a young Cambodian child's day. She sent him with her father, knowing that the children in Cambodia had very little. In the beginning of The Angry Skies, you can see Dr. Kerr's children prepare him for his journey.

Dr. Kerr calls himself "an accidental filmmaker," as that was not his initial intent when he set off to climb Mt. Everest 17 years ago. But sometimes destiny hunts you down in the most obscure of places. Now that he has started, he can't stop. He is currently working on a documentary on the American bombing of Vietnam during the Vietnam War. He has been there twice already in pursuing this research. Dr. Kerr, it seems, continues his work as both a physician and an advocate for those in need, both at home and abroad.

of doing the same with Montauk in the North when he first saw it in the early '20s, according to the Montauk Yacht Club's Web site. His slogan was "Miami in the winter, Montauk in the summer."

In order to attract the yachts of the day and forge ahead with his plan of a grand hotel, oceanfront bathing club, polo fields, 18-hole golf course, and gourmet restaurants, among other attractions, Fisher needed a harbor. So he dug a deep channel between freshwater Lake Montauk and Gardiner's Bay. He then dredged 12 feet around Star Island making it accessible for larger boats to visit the Montauk Yacht Club.

Fisher's grand plan fell short of fruition because of weather and the Great Depression. A severe hurricane hit Miami Beach in 1927, crushing tourism. Then in 1929, the Depression hit, causing real estate value to crumble.

While Montauk has never reached the same level as Miami Beach, residents still proudly celebrate the town it has evolved into at this year's Harbor Festival.

Some highlighted events include inflatable rides, an obstacle course, carnival games, face painting, mini boat races, crab races and a balloon artist.

For those interested in heading out to sea, the U.S. Coast Guard will offer tours on a boat. Other agencies will also be available, handing out helpful literature. They include the Montauk Fire Department, the Disasters Emergency Committee (DEC) and the N.Y. State Consumer Protection Board.

If that's not enough, residents can unleash pent-up anxiety on well-known locals, who will volunteer to be sitting ducks in a dunk tank, facing a pool of water below. Eligible mates and captains can participate in the fish-filleting contest, with the winner receiving the "Golden Fillet Knife." It takes place at 6 p.m. at Salivar's Dock.

Montauk Harbor restaurants will offer an array of their best dishes. If that food isn't enough, residents can fill up on a hot dog eating contest, or prove their strength in a clam-shucking contest. Local restaurants will also be judged in the second annual Baked Clam Contest.

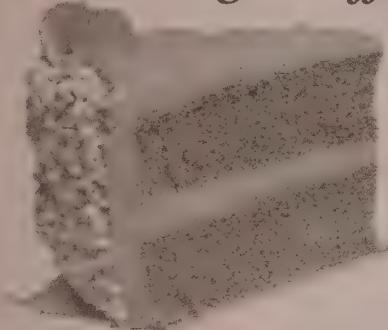

The final event at 7 p.m. is the raffle drawing at the Command Post. The first place prize is $10,000, second place is $5,000 and there will be five third place prizes of $1,000. Tickets will be sold prior to and during the events. The dollar amounts will be awarded as long as 1,250 tickets are sold. If less than 1,250 tickets are sold, the money awards will be proportional. Tickets cost $25.

Live music from Mambo Loco, Dan Becker's Mighty Task Force Band and the Wild Card Band will play all day. Radio station 103.9 WRCN will also be on hand contribute their musical talents.

Roads will be closed between Welles Avenue and West Lake Drive where over 40 vendors will set up. For more information, call The Montauk Chamber of Commerce at 668-2428.

the All Alumni Reunion, this coming weekend, will take some of their meals in the old cafeteria. When the Wood Hall dining facility breathes its last this summer, there will only be the snack machine in Chancellor's Hall for anyone on campus who is looking for food.

The Library is open for "summer hours" and is scheduled to remain open this fall.

Some of the dormitory facilities are also in use this summer for the Writer's program that takes place on campus in July. Student housing is also available for summer students.

The other buildings on campus that are not in use this summer will gradually be shut up and sealed off to prevent vandalism or souvenir hunting.

* * *

WLIU, the radio station, is housed on the top floor of Chancellor's Hall in a dazzling, glass enclosed space that looks out on what was the entire campus. The original college radio station was started in the basement of Southampton Hall in 1974 by a group of students. It has grown over the last 35 years to become the pre-eminent jazz station on the East End of Long Island. It is now staffed by highly skilled professionals who, through its affiliation with NPR, provide some of the best news and programming to be heard anywhere on Long Island. WSCR, the student run radio station at Southampton College, has ceased to exist.

The WLIU Summer Jazz Benefit will be held on Friday, July 15th. This is the third annual WLIU Jazz Legends Summer Benefit. It is a tented event with food and dancing; however, this is the first time it will be held on the Great Lawn of the Southampton Campus. It was previously held on the grounds of one of the Area's beautiful wineries. Bonnie Grice, WLIU's premier and nationally syndicated broadcaster, will hold a "smack down" with Ed Germaine, another terrific and popular on-air personality from WLIU. This is the singular "musical event" to be held on campus this summer.

While Robert FX Sillerman is still the Chancellor, the famed annual "All for the Sea Concert" that he and his wife, Laura, created, will not be held this year.

WLIU is the flagship station of Long Island University's Radio Network and can be heard from the shores of southern Connecticut to the inland suburbs of Great Neck as well as over the Internet. WLIU must continue to proselytize listeners to grow its audience and maintain its financial base of contributing listeners. Dr. Wallace Smith, the director of the radio network, said that he has been promised "continued support from Long Island University even if the facilities on campus are sold or leased." Accordingly, the transmitter site behind Pratt Hall and Chancellor's Hall broadcast facility will remain intact. The Radio station's budget was separated from the Southampton College budget about 4 or 5 years ago so that any operating subsidy from Long Island University would not count against the Southampton College budget. Dr. Smith added that, "The changes at the college will not derail the radio station because there is such a strong commitment to continue this station, from both the community and Long Island University. This station is part of the legacy of Southampton College. We should celebrate that."

The School of Continuing Education has just published its summer schedule and it looks very promising. It contains a great variety of courses for members of the community who are eager to learn more about Real Estate, Making Movies, Computer Classes, Digital Photography, Life Drawing and English as a Second Language. The continuation of this part of the college is also dependant on its ultimately becoming self sustaining.

The Children's School will be open and will continue to stress the nurturing of developmental skill through creativity and inquisitiveness. Most if not all the facilities of the college are still available to the children who will be attending this summer.

The Graduate School will be adding courses in Homeland security for the fall and offering courses this summer in the Arts, Media, English, Writing, and Professional Studies.

Almost all the classes this summer will be held in Chancellor's Hall, with the exception of the Children's School, which has its own separate facilities on campus.

The Bishop-Burke Library will still loom large, unfinished and an empty shell. Symbolic, perhaps, of Long Island University's inability to come to terms with what was needed to continue the amazing dream that was Southampton College.

The Freedom Fighters of Montauk

By Dan Rattiner

Freedom fighting is becoming very fashionable on the East End. The latest to strain against the yoke of bondage are some Montauk residents led by a new organization, the Montauk Village Incorporation Committee. "We feel it's time for Montauk to get home rule," said Frank Capozzola, one of the freedom fighters. "We pay 30% of the taxes for the town of East Hampton and we're not even represented on the town board. We're a little put out by it."

It's an idea that Montauk people have been batting around for years, Mr. Capozzola said, but no one has ever done anything about it. That is until a few months ago when he, Bob Lackman of the IGA and Dick White of White's Liquor Store decided the time was right. "You can either sit around and talk about it for years, or you can do it. So we decided to make a move."

They formed their committee, sent a newsletter to every resident of Montauk describing what they were up to, and hired Irving Miller, the accountant who did the Peconic County feasibility study, to do a study for them too. His report, which should be completed by the end of May, will give an estimate of how much independence should cost. Then, said Mr. Capozzola, his committee will decide on whether to continue their move for independence. "We'll study it and then make a decision.

If it will cost too much, we'll just take our lumps and remain part of the town. But at least the question will have been put to bed," he said. The lumps he's talking about – the reason they're seeking their independence – have nothing to do with planning or zoning, according to Mr. Capozzola. "This is not being done as part of the controversy over Napeague," he said. "Napeague doesn't bother us because it's not part of us."

What does bother them is taxation without representation. "The one and a half million dollars we send into East Hampton each year..... what does it get us? Just look at our roads and services. For years I've been asking that they fix the road going up to the elementary school. It floods and it's dangerous but they've never done a thing. They never had any money."

He added that some months ago a fire truck nearly had an accident on the way to a fire when the vehicle hit a rut on East Lake Drive. "We haven't had any road work in Montauk in a year, other than makeshift repairs. It's terrible," he said.

According to Mr. Capozzola, the members of his committee are also concerned about inadequate police coverage in Montauk, and about the fact that their village is sixteen miles from their town hall in East Hampton. "I bet some of our councilmen haven't been out here two times since they were elected," he said, adding that Montauk really is different from East Hampton. "We're unique. We have some industry, and we have our own identity. We should be separate, free to do things our own way. And we've been governed too long by East Hampton, so we're revolting."

His words sound strangely familiar. Could it be that the Montauk residents have jumped on the freedom bandwagon, inspired by the drive for Peconic County? Absolutely not, says Mr. Capozzola. "This has been in the works for a long time, before anyone started talking about splitting from Suffolk County. We have no affiliation with the Peconic County movement."

The reaction of the Montauk people to move for home rule has been positive. Many people have spent money to pay for the feasibility study and have asked the committee to proceed. So far they've collected $2,500 of the $10,000 they'll need to cover the costs for the accountant, legal services and the newsletter, which keeps people updated on what's going on in the Montauk Freedom Movement.

Mr. Capozzola said that he and the friends with whom he started this drive are not in it for personal gain. "I don't want to be mayor or trustee. I just want to help get things straightened out for Montauk."

Adam's Window on the World

By Dan Rattiner

Dad came over for a visit the other morning and with him he brought a 65-pound stuffed and mounted striped bass.

"It's the one I caught in 1958 off the Lighthouse," he said. "Help me get it out of the car."

The stuffed fish could not have been brought over in one of the modern, smaller cars, but in the back seat of Dad's seven-year-old Cadillac, it fit quite easily.

"This is for my grandson," Dad said, holding the screen door open for me. "Is he here?"

Adam, who is five years old, was standing in the center of the television room, his head cocked to one side, staring at the huge stuffed fish. It was bigger than him.

"Hi, Adam," Dad said.

"Hi."

Usually, Adam greeted his grandfather with a big hug and kiss. Today, however, he just stared at him suspiciously.

"Where do you want it?" I grunted from the back hall.

"Ask Adam."

"Where do you want it?"

"In my room."

Dad walked over to Adam's door and held it open while I struggled with the big stuffed fish to get it down the stairs. It was not heavy, but there was a tight turn to the flight of stairs that lead down to the finished, paneled basement that is Adam's room.

Toys were strewn about on the rug here. In the dim light, I looked for a shelf big enough to accommodate this five-foot long fish, gave up, and then set it down lengthwise on one of the two beds in the room. The head lay on the pillow, and the tail reached to the foot. I brushed the dust off my hands and climbed the stairs back up to the television room. I'd hang it up down there later.

"Someday, you could catch a fish like that," Dad was saying.

About noon, I drove into town and bought Adam something he had been asking about for a long, long time. It was a radio, an AM-FM, and though it cost only twenty-one dollars, it was quite elaborate with lots of dials, switches and knobs.

"This is just for you," I said, as we pulled it out of its cardboard box and studied it on the living room sofa. There were white Styrofoam packing holders, an instruction manual, a warranty card to be mailed in, inspection stickers and a booklet listing service locations. Adam rubbed his hands excitedly.

"Now, the way it operates," I said, "is that you pull this silver antenna up HERE."

Adam grasped the radio with its handle and turned it on. Almost immediately, disco music thumped out of the thing, and Adam squealed with delight.

"I want to take it to my room."

"You can. But first let me show you all these other dials."

* * *

For an hour, all that came out of Adam's room was the muffled sound of Adam's new radio. Then, at three o'clock, Adam came bounding up the stairs and burst through the door into the television room. I was in the middle of watching a baseball game.

"Guess what?" He shouted.

"What?"

"The Giants are playing the Meadowlands tomorrow night."

Adam turned, and having issued his bulletin, raced back downstairs the way he came up.

Forty-five minutes later he was back up.

"There's cars going east on the Expressway!" He shouted.

Once again Adam bounded down into his room and once again we could hear the steady drone of his new acquisition. Adam was a freedom fighter; getting his first real news of the outside world over the Voice of America. It was a whole new world for him, and I knew we would not be seeing him again - except perhaps for brief bulletins - until dinner time.

Late that night, I finished reading Adam his story, tucked him into bed and kissed him on the forehead. The radio was silent now and the room was still and dark.

In the dimness of the nightlight, he looked up at me, took his thumb out of his mouth and pushed the quilt down over his chin.

"Dad?"

"Yeah."

Happy Summer

I walked into a sea of sequin and Louboutin wedges, as I arrived on the Memorial Day party scene this past weekend. Saturday evening began the battle of the nightclubs, but this is one competition that actually benefits the party people. Patrons get to take advantage of all the glorious clubbing opportunities and pick and choose the atmosphere they desire. Just ask Mandy Moore, who was back to her blond roots and successfully dodged the press while hiding at a VIP table upstairs at Star Room. Mandy, who was all grown up and enjoying a night off from the cameras, told me, "I recently wrapped up a few projects including one of my upcoming movies, Romance & Cigarettes. I'm just happy to be relaxing this weekend." Directly next to Mandy's table, was Nicole Richie's fiancé, DJ AM a.k.a. Adam Goldstein, who was serving up magical beats to the crowd. "I've been doing this since I was four years old," DJ AM whispered. "I can't imagine doing anything else." PR maven Jonathan Cheban agrees, "Adam was born to DJ." Cheban was modeling "Knives", a new version of his latest Clarendon T-shirt line. "I'm selling them at Blue & Cream boutique in East Hampton!" You can also be one of the first to snatch up your favorite Clarendon styles at Intermix, this coming July 4th weekend, when their new store opens in Southampton. Cheban's blonder half and business partner, Lizzie Grubman, was busy manning the downstairs room and added when it comes to nightclubs in EH, "There is no competition, they can all try, but they'll never win."

Leonardo DiCaprio certainly wasn't playing favorites when he decided to party late night at Tavern which was a hot-spot out East for many years before Star Room and Resort took over.

It may have been the mesmerizing light show outside the front entrance of Star Room Sunday evening, thanks to Barry Scott, that kept people entertained while waiting in line to get into Kimora Simmons Baby Phat summer kick-off party. Inside, the quintessential King and Queen of the Hamptons snuggled for the cameras at a downstairs corner booth next to Samantha Cole. I asked Russell and Kimora how they managed to do it all, and Russell gushed, "Kimora and I have known each other for more than thirteen years, and have been married over seven. It just works. I do my yoga every morning and try to find a balance." Kimora laughed, "I have help." NY Knicks point guard Stephon Marbury was chillin' at the downstairs bar and had just finished dinner at Jean-Luc East, "We waited a while but the food was good, this place is cool," he smiled.

Now, I did mention you have several night-

The Common Ground, Excerpt

By Scott Chaskey

They appear out of nowhere, though immediately the air absorbs the musical motion of their flight. Above the noise of the diesel tractor, the feeding flight of swallows, like notes rising and falling, creates meadow music. I am there to mow a field; they arrive to catch the flush of insects that rise out of the grasses. Their undulating flight suggests that we are at sea, though I feel the solid wheels of the tractor beneath me. This rich soil supports my weight, the weight of timothy and clover and ragweed, and also the weightlessness of swallows. Row after row I follow the dance of birds who benefit from my labor, part of the broad circle that involves the soil, we act in time, together.

We are mowing often now, when crops are "over the hill" or harvested, in preparation for the autumn cover cropping. Expecting rain, two days ago we prepared several fields to be seeded with a late-summer mixture of bellbeans, oats, and buckwheat. Soon we will note a carpet of green, as the oats and buckwheat jump up, and later the deeper green of the legumes known as bellbeans (a field version of fava beans), sown to provide a supply of nitrogen for the crops to follow. Buckwheat grows to a height of a few feet within the oat mixture, blossoms white, and then, along with the oats, dies back during the winter. In spring we plow the residue, a superb source of organic matter, back into our Amagansett loam. Corn stalks, bean beetles, fat radish roots, red-root pigweed, purslane – all turned back into the layer of humus, food for earthworms and microbes, organic matter for sprouting buckwheat and oats, foundation for our food.

I've just returned from the autumn squash patch – these cucurbits, beginning to ripen now, loved the last rain. We are now harvesting the first fruits from this patch, the variety known as Pasta, a spaghetti squash. Soon, with the cool of the night, buttercups, sugarloaf, delicata, and red kuri will sweeten, as pumpkins turn a fine color in the far field. The first leeks, kale, Chinese cabbage, potatoes (red, white, and blue), Silver Queen corn, and peppers of color all ripen within the "mellow fruitfulness" of the season.

This has been the year of the cucumber and the crow. Planted by hand at the right moment in the right soil, when soil temperature had risen to 65 degrees or so, cultivated carefully, and washed with abundant rains, Marketmore, Suyo Long, Little Leaf, Lemon, and Boothbay Blonde have flourished, sheltered by the sunflowers. At the beginning of this year, Ellen C.,

THIS COMMON GROUND

farm member and lover of cukes, remembering another abundant year, pointed to the corner of the Deep Lane field: "Cucumbers love to grow out there, you know....."

In another field, to the south of Town Lane, where we have bedded down tomatoes, peppers, eggplant, broccoli, sprouts, and late cauliflower – it is here the crows dominate. Whenever I have the chance to be in this field with the cultivating tractor I take up the chase, racing from one planting patch to another, beeping wildly

(the case 265 horn is particularly high pitched). The crows, bold and blocky, shaped like the pepper varietal Fat and Sassy, seem amused, but basically unconcerned. They repeatedly find temporary lodging atop the cedars or among the sassafras trees. To date these crows, joined by cousin pheasants and a growing herd of deer, have eaten 95 percent of our sweet corn, and a fair share of tomatoes and various other nightshades. The field is bordered with an electrified deer fence, and the birds casually descend through the "bird scare" tape and a battery of pots and pans and utensils carefully arranged by apprentices Jessica and Chuck. I warned that this musical clothesline was no match for a well-trained crowd of crows, acrobatic and irascible, but I also intend to encourage apprentice ingenuity. Investigating, I learned that Corvus brachyrhynchos has a high reproductive capacity and is virtually omnivorous. When I complained to my young son Liam that I had asked the crows to simply share some of the food with us (given that we planted it), he replied logically, "They can't talk to people or understand them..... if they could, they would probably share!"

25 Years Ago In Dan's Papers June 6, 1980

A Domestic Quarrel, 1980

By Dan Rattiner

For many months Richard Salter of Far Rockaway would come home from work to find that his wife had turned the thermostat up to 70 degrees. He would turn it down.

"Why do you keep it so hot?" Salter asked one day.

"It's not hot."

"We're supposed to keep it at 68."

"You don't have to be home during the day," Mrs. Salter said. "It's cold."

"Seventy degrees is un-American," Salter replied.

And he turned the thermostat down.

But the next day he came home to find that the thermostat had been turned up once again.

"Did you do this?"

"Yes."

"Well, leave it down, dammit."

And Richard Salter jerked the thermostat down to sixty-eight degrees.

The next day, a Saturday, Salter went out for a while and came back to find the thermostat at seventy once again.

"What do you think this is, Saudi Arabia?" he yelled, jerking the thermostat down once again.

Sunday was the day that events took place in the Salter family resulting in the article in Newsday.

Salter came downstairs in his bathrobe and saw his wife, right there in the living room, in the act of turning up the thermostat.

"I don't believe this," Salter screamed.

Without waiting another moment, he ran into the dining room, opened a drawer and took out the 38 caliber pistol he kept there to protect that home against burglars.

"Get away from there," he said, pointing the gun at his wife. "Get away from that thermostat."

Mrs. Salter, startled, took one step back. Salter motioned with his gun. "Step back further," he said.

Salter took one step forward, reached up, and turned the thermostat down still again.

"This is the last time. You leave the thermostat at sixty-eight. Is that clear?"

"Absolutely."

At this moment, Salter's stepson Michael walked into the room.

"What's going on?" he asked his stepfather.

"You stay out of this."

"Put away the gun, dad."

"I'm not going to hurt anybody. I've just got to persuade your mother to leave the thermostat at 68 degrees."

One hour later, after Salter had gone out to get the Sunday paper, Michael had a talk with his mother.

"I don't think it's right," he said, "I don't think he should threaten you with a gun like that."

After a while Mrs. Salter and Michael decided that the best thing for Salter might be to have him arrested. The gun could have gone off. They had to teach him not to do a thing like that ever again.

When Salter came home with his paper, he opened the door to find two strange men in his living room.

"Where's my wife?" he asked.

"We're police officers, and we have a warrant for your arrest. Stand against the wall and put your arms over your head."

The police officers frisked Salter while informing him of his rights. He was being charged with criminal possession of a weapon and reckless endangerment.

"Okay, Mr. Salter, let's go."

Mr. Salter was handcuffed to one of the officers, and was led out toward the front door. But as he crossed the living room rug, he asked the officers to wait just one moment please. He wanted to do one last thing.

Reaching out, Salter very carefully turned the thermostat down one final time. Detective Edward Garrity, who reported this incident to the Newsday reporter later in the day, could not recall what this new setting was as they left.

"Uh, that's a hard one, Adam. You heard that on the radio?"

"Yeah."

"I'll tell you about that another time. Go to sleep now."

"Okay."

Adam rolled over, stuck his thumb back in his mouth and closed his eyes. I kissed the back of his head and got up.

On the shelf, at the back of his bed, was the brand-new radio. I checked that it was turned off, which it was, walked across the room, and then stopped and looked down at the striped bass on the guest bed. I looked at Adam to make sure he didn't see what I was doing, then bent down, pulled up the blanket and tucked the striped bass in. It had been a long day.

It's 5pm...

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Sheltered Islander #351

Sometimes a Great Notion...

This is what's happening in my house this week. I bet this is happening all over. It proves that you need incredible strength to raise a teenager; strength to handle their crises, strength to get through sleepless nights of worry, and strength not to laugh in the face of moronic logic.

My daughter opened the huge, gift-wrapped box and stared at her graduation gift in horrified disbelief... "Luggage? You got me luggage? What did I ever do to deserve luggage for a graduation gift? I need a car!"

"What did I ever do to deserve luggage for a graduation gift?" I repeated silently in my mind. "Oh, let me count the ways," I thought, "you have aggravated me to the breadth and depths and height's my soul can reach... You have tested every limit, broken every rule, manipulated every situation you could, lied, gotten your friends to cover your lies in exchange for covering theirs, dated and attempted to bring into my home men I would have scraped off the bottom of my shoe, just to spite me." That's what I was thinking, and after all, it's the thought that counts...

So I said, "It's a very nice matching six piece set! Monogrammed. It wasn't cheap. 10 year warranty. It will last you a long time. What's not to like?"

"It's luggage! LUGGAGE! I'm your child, why are you trying to get rid of me?"

"Wait, I'm confused," I said, stifling a giggle. "For the past four years haven't you said I'm NOT a child anymore stop treating me like one!" and "I can't wait to graduate and get away from you! You are such a control freak!" Wasn't that you?"

"I was a kid. What did you expect me to say?"

"So you're still a kid and I can expect you to obey me, or you're not a kid and you're responsible for yourself just like an.....adult?"

"I'm not a kid, but I'm still your child and your responsibility till I'm 18 and there's nothing you can do about it!"

Suppressing my laughter and employing years of discipline in keeping a straight face while talking to a teenager, I said, "You're eighteen in 27 days. Adulthood, you know....that big nasty thing in the rearview mirror of your life I've been warning you about...will be here in 28 days. Since you're not planning on college anymore, you'll have to make plans, which will include moving out. I thought the luggage would help. It's not a car, but hey, each piece has wheels like a car and can hold all your clothes like a car, and if you make a 'brooom, brooom' sound, you can pretend it's a car. Luggage is how people moved before cars were invented. I know I've said this before, but maybe you're in a mental space to hear this now....If you got a JOB, you would be paid MONEY, which you can use to buy a CAR."

"Look, I just want to have my Senior summer off, okay? I want have fun with my friends. I'm so stressed out I can't even think!"

"You finished classes in January. You worked a job three days and quit. Since then, you've done whatever you wanted. You're here once a week to do laundry, eat everything in the kitchen, fight with me, get money and leave. Exactly what stress are you under?" I am now covering my mouth with my hand to help keep from laughing out loud because if I do, she'll get furious that I'm not taking her seriously and then we'll have to have this conversation again next week.

"You don't know anything about my life," she said.

"So tell me."

"I can't."

"Okay, don't. It's your life."

"But if I told you what was going on, you'd understand me a lot more and have more sympathy."

"So tell me."

"I can't. It's too complicated. I have to please everyone, all my friends, and you too."

"You don't please me."

"You know why? No one can please you!"

"Okay, so if you move in with the friends you're essentially living with now, you won't have to please me at all and you'll have less stress, right?"

"You see how controlling you are? You know I can't move in with them until I can pay them rent. You always get all up in my business! That's why I'm never home. I CAN'T LIVE WITH YOU!"

"Wait.....wait.....wait..... I have this really great idea....."

Dame Edna, who is performing across the street at the Music Box Theatre, was an amusing treat. She recited a poem and threw Gladiolas from the balcony to Hugh Jackman during the ceremony.

The party was to kick off the upcoming Parrish Art Museum Midsummer Gala Benefit. The cocktail party was a blend of style meets society on the sprawling lawn of the estate. CANCER CURE CONCERT AT THE VAIL-LEAVITT MUSIC HALL

The Vail-Leavitt Music Hall hosted a Cancer Cure Concert which was presented by the students from Riverhead High School on Friday, May 27th, with all proceeds going to the American Cancer Society through "Relay for Life." Adrienne Arnaau and her team from "EMOSEWA II" (which is awesome spelled backwards, which indeed describes all the children involved in this project) got together with the Relay for Life team to put together and present this show.

It took approximately two months for the high school students to get everything ready for the show. They needed sponsors and acts, so they approached Riverhead storeowners and advertised in local papers. They put up posters and banners in their school and around the town of Riverhead. They also made their own costumes and sold tickets to the show. And finally they dedicated their time and effort into learning and presenting their acts.

Enough cannot be said about these very talented and dedicated students. The show had seven acts: Stars of Tomorrow (a female cast, and a male cast), A Comedy Team, Whitebread Banana Nun, Les Miserables Medley, Becky's Backstreet Boys and a Jazz Band. (Jeff Osarczuk, the saxophonist of the band, composed several of the songs.) With the talent that these students demonstrated, we will most likely be seeing and hearing them in the future. They were awesome! A 50/50 raffle was held and the winner, Mr. Hine, donated his winnings back to the cause. Hats off to these fine and upstanding high school students!

Hang on Before It's Gone

North Forkers Don't Want "Hamptonization" to Happen to Them

By David Lion Rattiner

There has been a lot of activity on the Real Estate front out on the North Fork. This activity has many community members nervous about the future of the area. The fear is that the natural land that makes the area as beautiful as it is will be sold to developers at high prices so that they can create condos, luxury houses, golf courses, or whatever. Usually, development of an area is a positive thing. It stimulates the economy, brings in new jobs, it is the American way. But on the Eastern End of Long Island, there is much fear that it will do the opposite due to the fact that much of the economy in these areas run on summer tourists who come out to the area because of its natural beauty.

Last week, the local newspapers reported an incredible amount of real estate news. There was Kenneth Wilpon, a developer in Staten Island who is looking to spend $66 million on North Fork property so he can develop the area and build 108 luxury senior houses, a golf course and a 290 room hotel/conference center, complete with several hotel villas, all of this at a cost of a cool $150 million. This is to be built in the area of Calverton, located near the EPCAL airport. At the housing hearing, many expressed their anger, with one man having to be escorted out by a police officer.

In Greenport, residents pleaded with the board to reconsider the proposed sale of Clarks Beach. Two weeks ago at a village board work session, the ball began to roll on the sale of the beach to Suffolk County. Village residents began their outcry, stating that it was too valuable an asset to the village to sell, even if it is to Suffolk County who will most likely maintain the beach.

Even a winery is up for sale. The Galluccio Family Wineries on the North Fork is going to be sold to the highest bidder and most likely be transformed from a winery into something else, such as luxury estates. It is mind boggling to some people that a person would want to sell their winery. It seems like running a winery on the North Fork is a lot of fun to do. Why not sell the winery and keep it the way it is instead of developing it into big houses?

Letters have been written to local newspapers expressing fear of the "Hamptonization" of the North Fork. Will all of the beautiful wineries sell out to bring in McMansions in the same way that many of the potato fields in the Hamptons have? It remains to be seen. Economic development is important, but protecting the environment is important too, that seems to be where most residents on the North Fork stand.

They don't want to change things to make them bigger and better, they are very happy just the way they are.

Unfortunately, that is not the way capitalism works. If you want to buy and build, you are going to have to destroy animals and trees, bring in trucks, people, and of course, money. This is the only reason anybody wants to make the developments in the first place. Is there anything that the villages on the North Fork can do to prevent developers from milking away all of North Fork's natural resources and destroying the very reason why people like to be here in the first place? After

"Should these kinds of land sales happen, local government has one ace card up its sleeve."

Should these kinds of land sales happen, however, local government has one ace card up its sleeve. There is the real estate tax of 2% that can be used to purchase more property on the North Fork and keep it protected from being sold to developers. This worked out well for many of the towns in the Hamptons because they used the tax money from sold properties to purchase more land and protect it. This is already happening right now on the North Fork, which means government is doing its job. Obviously, a way that can immediately stop development is to stop selling the land. Of course, this is an unrealistic thought, although it would be nice if we could keep everything the same for the next generation to enjoy. Towns that experience small growth is a good thing, the extra activity is good for the economy of the area. But it is those that take heavy advantage of destroying and building that make it a problem for everybody else. There are plenty of stories all over the country where this has happened to summer towns. Overdevelopment is great for a short period of time because the economy booms, then of course the boom reverses because all of the natural beauty disappears.

Is the North Fork in danger of being overdeveloped? In my opinion, as of right now, no. The area is stunningly gorgeous and there are way too many people there that want to fight for it. The several articles in the local papers are proof of this. Of course some development has to happen and this is a positive thing, as long as every consideration and effort is made to minimize disturbances to the environment and the character of the area. Overdevelopment, however, would obviously be bad. I'm not too worried though, we got a lot of people here that know what matters.

Kayaking is Bliss On The North Fork

By David Lion Rattiner

The North Fork has a lot to offer to the avid adventurer because it is filled with so many places to adventure to. One of the best activities to do on the North Fork, believe it or not, is to go paddle a Kayak. There is no motor required and it is easy on your wallet, too. Not to mention it is a great workout.

You can head down to Eagle's Neck Paddling Company in Southold, or you can head down to Peconic Paddler in Riverhead to enjoy this experience. It certainly is an adventure, and if you need to work off those extra calories you ate at The Bayview Inn, Pepi's, The Fifth Season or the Modern Snack Bar, you are in luck. Kayaking is not only enjoyable, but it is great for your body as well.

When I set off on my kayak adventure I realized that this was going to be an experience that I would like the second that I stepped into the kayak and got on the water. The feeling of the kayak is a great feeling because the boat in the water needs to be balanced. This is not a difficult task to accomplish; however, it does take some exciting effort. Once I felt comfortable inside the kayak I headed out to see what I could see.

At first I started to paddle constantly to try and get out far from where I started. I do not know what my desire was for this other than the need to fully experience the sport. However, after paddling vigorously I found that I was getting tired rather quickly and needed to slow down. Kayaking has a lot to do with physical strength if you really want to put in the effort. I found that after really putting in a lot of energy in the beginning, I wanted to slow it down and start sight seeing.

The first thing that you notice is that it is supremely quiet, just you and nature out there on the water, which really makes for a wonderful experience. I was regretting not bringing my camera on board my kayak out of fear that it was going to get wet (which it probably would have) but some of the spots that you can travel to really would make for some excellent pictures.

After cruising around for another thirty minutes or so, I decided that I would take a water break and sit back and enjoy the view. I put down my kayak paddle in the boat, which is important to do because if you leave it outside the boat it will float away, and grabbed my water bottle.

After hydrating I laid back as far as I could in the kayak and took a nice break. I was away from everything. There was no traffic, no people, and no hustle and bustle. It was here where I learned that kayaking is not only about adventure, but also about relaxing.

After my much needed rest I headed back in, using the current to help steer me along the way. When I headed back and returned my kayak, I was amazed at how my arms and abs felt. I really got in a good workout on the kayak, especially my biceps from pulling the water past me. I was a little wet from accidentally splashing the water into my boat, but it was nothing that was unbearable. A little splash of water onto me was worth the experience and the adventure.

Heading back home and leaving the kayak behind, I hit the road much more relaxed than before. I also left the radio off. Kayaking really lets you know how a little peace, quiet and exercise is good for both the body and soul. I highly recommend giving this activity a try. Anybody can do it, young and old. Kids seem to love it and it is a great activity for parents and kids to do together.

Eagle's Neck Paddling Company is in Southold. Their number is 765-3502. Peconic Paddler is in Riverhead. Call 727-9895.

Palmer Vineyards' New Summer Sippers

I was invited to a Memorial Day party last weekend and, as usual, volunteered to bring wine (along with my famous-in-some-circles grilled chicken wings). Because not many of the party's attendees drink wine and those that do usually stick to light, fairly innocuous whites, I knew I had to leave my favorite BBQ wine – Cabernet Franc – at home. But I also knew Palmer Vineyards in Aquebogue was releasing four new whites, so I figured I'd take those with me after doing a private tasting. The folks at Palmer called these wines "perfect summer wines."

Perfect? No, but because the wines are all from the 2004 vintage, they are young and, in some cases, still a little tight.

Palmer Vineyards 2004 White Riesling ($14) is a nice, light-bodied white for the wine newbies in any crowd. Its nose is lightly floral with hints of citrus while its palate offers tight, slightly underwhelming peach and other fruit flavors in an off-dry style. I think with time, the fruitiness will develop and grow, but I was left wanting a bit more acidity to balance the residual sugar.

I tell anyone that will listen that Gewurztraminer is the ideal white to serve with spicy Asian or Mexican food, and that goes for spicy party foods like my grilled wings, too. Palmer Vineyards 2004 Gewurztraminer ($17) features the expected exotic citrus aromas and flavors with a gently spicy finish. Again, it's made in an off-dry style and a touch more acidity would have improved its balance. Make sure you don't over-chill this one; it's better only slightly chilled.

Pinot Blanc is one of the most under-appreciated varietals around and Palmer Vineyards 2004 Pinot Blanc ($13) was my favorite of these releases. Through a combination of steel and barrel fermentation, winemaker Tom Drozd has crafted a medium-bodied wine with delicate lemon aromas, fresh melon flavors and a citrus finish that is slightly creamy.

If you think that Sauvignon Blanc from New

9th Annual Riverhead Streetpainting Festival

By Debbie Tuma

For the ninth year, sidewalks along Riverhead's downtown riverfront looked like giant mosaic prints. All along the Peconic River, people of all ages were crouching on the pavement, using colorful chalks to create their favorite themes and images in large sizes on the cement.

The 9th Annual Riverhead Community Mosaic Streetpainting Festival, as it is called, took place last Sunday on a perfect sunny afternoon, and was well attended by both artists and fans that strolled the grounds. One artist, Rod Tryon of Cutchogue, who is well known for his professional street creations, was sketching a huge, scary shark with its teeth-filled jaws wide open. Tryon, who hails from

Santa Barbara, California, was also known for his street painting there. His beautiful art square was sponsored by Barth's Drug Store in Riverhead. Another artist nearby, Eli Fishman of Port Jefferson, was painting a giant sea picture of whales and dolphins, which was sponsored by Atlantis Marine World Aquarium of Riverhead. Paul Kreiling, of Greenport, was painting a large ship at sea, sponsored by the "Wine Press Concerts."

Nearby, two little girls, Heather and Kristen, were busy working on an angel painting with flowers. "We're having fun, and we've been here all day," said Heather.

This entire event was organized by the East End Arts Council of Riverhead, and the proceeds support scholarship opportunities for students at their Community School For the Arts. Pat Snyder, Director of the Council, explained that this school offers private and group music lessons, visual art and theater classes, and a summer camp for students, all ranging in ages from one to 90.

"Each year, we have different businesses sponsoring these artists," said Snyder. "They have the option of providing their own street painters, or we'll find artists for them to use." She said on the day of the show, people can buy their own square for $20 to paint.

Snyder explained that many of the surrounding colorful squares of cement were also painted by local teenagers from area schools. "We have many talented teenage artists, like Sheri Ebert, Julie and Christa Florio, and Bryan Landsberg," she said. "These students really add a lot to our community art show."

Snyder said the main purpose of the East End Arts Council's annual Streetpainting Festival is to unite the entire community. "We bring together a diverse group of many different ethnic people, which represents the fabric of the Riverhead area," she said. "This is also a celebration of the arts here." She added that there are no prizes for the winners, because "everyone is a winner."

"This is not a competition, but just a way of bringing everyone together in a fun, non-competitive way," she said.

In addition to the street painting, there was an entire festival of street vendors and music, with live bands and singing groups coming on stage in a van parked by the river. Following an opening reception by Riverhead Town Supervisor Phil Cardinale, and a flag ceremony by the Riverhead Moose Cub Scout Pack 242 and Boy Scout Troop 242, there were numerous musical groups playing throughout the day, including George Cork Maul and the "Hidden City Orchestra", Jay Loomis with Global Flutes, Jay Dadarria with alternative acoustic, singer Laura Hoch, singer John Flor Sisante, John Keebler on blues guitar, rockin' surf music of "Costa del Soul," Warren McKnight with folk favorites, and the Community School of the Arts Youth Choir. All were broadcast live at the show by WRIV Radio Station of Riverhead, which was on hand at the show.

All around the grounds, craftspeople were selling their handmade jewelry, pottery, woodcarvings, and photography near the river. There were also many activities for the kids, with a children's craft table creating artwork out of recycled materials.

Eli Fishman

"We hope to have an even bigger venue for our 10 year anniversary next year," said Pat Snyder. "This festival has really grown in popularity over the years, because there's something here for everyone."

Restoration of an Old Gem

By David Lion Rattiner

If you have ever cruised around Jamesport you may have noticed a stunning house that once belonged to a man named Jedediah Hawkins, a captain in the Menhaden fishery business. This Victorian mansion was built in 1863 by Jedediah Hawkins, who had served in the Union Army. He built this house for his young family and in it he raised his children to the mid and latter part of the nineteenth century. The house has remained there ever since. A lot of legends roam around the house. There is evidence that it was once a part of the Underground Railroad.

Up until a year ago, the house was in grave danger of being torn to the ground. It was in disrepair, the walls were falling apart, in essence it was getting too old and needed to be torn down and have something else put there, or it needed to be restored. Thankfully, it is not going to be torn to the ground, but rather, for the past year has been in the process of being restored and is going to be open to the public at the end of the summer.

It is amazing how many people are involved in this restoration project. Even though there are many restoration projects in the area, this one is unique because of the incredible effort that has been made to make it as beautiful as possible for the public.

The people that purchased the house are Jeff Hallock and Dr. Frank Arena. They believed that waiting for someone to destroy the property and make it lose its historic value would be bad. They decided that they would spend the extra money to restore the property and turn it into a luxury hotel for tourists. In September, the restoration is going to be complete and they are going to allow for public viewing starting September 18 through October. The proceeds of the opening ceremony and the viewing will be for the benefit of Central Suffolk Hospital.

More than 20 prominent Long Island and New York designers, interior and exterior, have been working on the project to restore the building. They are doing everything they can so that they can maintain its historic appeal. Every effort has been made to make the place as authentic as possible with much of the original work in the building to remain intact. It is remarkable how much can be done these days when it comes to restoration.

It seems like it would be a good thing for the community of Jamesport to use an already existing house that is not being used for anything and turn it into a place where people can go and have a good time instead of allowing it to be torn down by a wrecking ball. The historical value of the building only adds more character and my hat is off to the two owners of the property for opting to restore the property and not to knock it down to make something new. You can drive by the property and see the changes that they have made for yourself. I highly recommend doing this because it will remind you of the rich history of the North Fork area. It will also remind you that we can save historical buildings and use them for the greater good instead of just knocking them down.

The Washwick Agency Health Insurance Made Affordable

What happens when 2,000 self-employed business men and women, freelance artists, writers and other sole proprietors are brought together? They get group insurance rates that are far more affordable than they could ever get on their own, thanks to The Washwick Agency.

"Due to New York insurance laws, sole proprietors do not have the same access to affordably-priced medical and dental insurance as larger businesses," explained Karl Washwick, president of the Riverhead, Long Island-based agency. Many independent contractors, freelancers, and small businesses and their employees find insurance costs so exorbitant, that insurance expenses drain an excessive portion of their bottom line or, more frequently, they go without coverage all together.

With medical expenses soaring, people are taking high risks operating in business without proper insurance coverage. Many feel they have no choice.

"I am a small business so I understand the problems of small businesses," said Washwick, who founded the agency 25 years ago to meet the medical and dental insurance needs of an underserved, but significant population.

The Washwick Agency formed and acts as administrator of the Peconic Bay Business Association. By joining the association, the self-employed and their employees are eligible for group rate plans. Although based at the eastern tip of Long Island, the Peconic Bay Business Association provides its services to people working or residing in all of Long Island and all five boroughs of New York City.

By specializing in medical and dental insurance, Washwick feels his agency's efforts to get clients the best possible rates should stay undiluted." I don't do car insurance," Washwick laughed.

The Washwick Agency works closely with each client to best understand his or her insurance needs, and then helps choose the best of many available plans for that client. Each plan can offer a variety of baffling choices, such as HMOs, In-and-Out-of-Network plans and options for hospitalization and prescription co-pays, vision plans, and dependent child coverage. The Washwick Agency helps cut through the confusion. "I'll tell you the plans that are available, and the pros and cons of each," Washwick said.

The Washwick Agency also offers such "business solutions" as oversight of employee benefit plans and retirement savings plans.

The agency's mission is to provide clients with the best possible plan at the lowest possible cost. They promise to listen to your needs, sort through the maze of products and services available and help you choose what is most appropriate for you.

The Washwick Agency is located at 860 East Main Street in Riverhead, New York. For more information on their services call 369-0888 or visit their website at www.Washwick.com.

East End Arts Council "Preserving the Land" Review

With the environment in such a fragile state, it is befitting that this eclectic arrangement of local artists would be on display at Riverhead's East End Arts Council. The council brings 10 different themes throughout the year. This environmental theme, "Preserving the Land," is a blend of local issues; habitat loss, the LI Pine Barrens fire, Horseshoe crab survival and global issues such as chemical rain and global warming. This compilation from 36 artists is a mixed media of paintings and photographs some exuding hope and light, others darkness and despair sprinkled with a bit of humor.

Each artist portrayed their vision of the environment in a different way, through a snow-white winter, a bright orange summer, blue hues of spring and the golden wheat of fall. Some artists celebrated the pristine beauty that still exists, while others portrayed the planet's path of destruction.

"Some work is politically charged, and some is more about beauty," Gallery Curator Daphne Shuttleworth explains. Artist Janet Culbertson's collection "Tomorrow's Landscape" is a solo show in the a message that needs to be broadcast."

Dennis Snyder's acrylic titled, "Last of the Horseshoe Crabs" is a striking, almost human-like skeleton of a Horseshoe crab, suspended against a peacock blue backdrop of the sea and sky. And Gina Gilmore's "Make Toast" is a political expression of President Bush painted on a piece of white bread popping out of a toaster. It is a humorous, witty and sarcastic example of the state of politics and the environment today.

Our own litter problem was captured on film by Bridget A. Walter in "Apathy," a Southold trashcan with thy trash runneth over. It just may make its way onto the walls of Town Hall as a friendly reminder of putting litter in its place. And Jane Kirkwood's oil painting, "Wind Angel," brings hope from the heavens through the breath of an angel. In lieu of power lines, bringing natural energy to those on earth, by blowing life force into the windmills.

The winner list from Wednesday's jury: Best in Show is Rosemarie Eisler for "Chemical Rain Exodus." First in Show went to Olive Reich for "Where Are All the Ice Floes Going?" Second place was Virginia Ashmoneit for "Natural Windflower Bog," third place Eileen Dawn Skretch "Wainscott Pond." Honorable mentions, Eileen Dawn Skretch "Town Lane," Kathryn Szoka "Seven Wheels," "Riverhead Bison," Jay Thorne "Heritage," and Jackie Zagon "Long Island Pine Barrens Fire, Aftermath."

All the work here has a message, either of beauty or destruction, simplicity or chaos—no matter how you view it it's bound to strike up a healthy conversation. This 5th theme of the year can be seen until July 3, 2005. The East End Arts Council gallery hours are Monday – Saturday 10 a.m. – 4 p.m. and Sunday 12:00 – 4 p.m. Located in Riverhead on 133 East Main St. You can also sit in on a lecture "Protecting Our Vanishing Landscape" by Tim Caufield, VP of Peconic Land Trust on Tuesday, June 7 from 6 – 8 p.m.

Zealand is too harsh and California versions are just flabby Chardonnay wannabes, Long Island Sauvignon Blanc is for you. Though not the best one available, Palmer Vineyards 2004 Sauvignon Blanc ($13) is quite tasty and well priced for daily summer sipping. It delivers the grassy aromas I like and even a little "cat pee" (that's a good thing with this varietal). On the tongue, it's fresh and crisp with grapefruit and lemongrass. This is a good, everyday style of Sauvignon Blanc.

It's important to say again that these wines are still pretty young and they'll certainly evolve with a few more months of bottle time. Try them at Palmer's tasting room this summer and taste for yourself. Remember, ultimately it's your palate that you should listen to. Me, I'll stick with the Blancs – Sauvignon and Pinot.

Guy de Fraumeni's Hollywood In The Hamptons

Aw, go 'wan, ya' bum. Ya' mudder wears G.I. shoes an' woister den dat, ya' mudder-in-law wears combat boots! Doze - I mean those words echo down the memorable halls of time and back again. Female-bashing is alive and kicking as violently as when cavemen did it with a spiked club. Without mother-in-law jokes, Uncle Milty would have been tongue-tied and recent movies might not have gotten their biggest horse laffs. Denigrating actresses who've been in the forefront of feminist emboldenment has folks rolling in the aisles. Wasn't it a gas to see Barbra Streisand playing giddy-yap atop Robert De Niro in Meet The Fockers as a yenta instead of a Yentle, and Candice Bergen slapped silly in Sweet Home Alabama? In the latest humiliating put-down of feminism, Monster-In-Law, Hollywood has lured Jane Fonda out of a 15-year abstinence from films perhaps as a two-way cross plug for her autobiography, My Life So Far.

Monster-In-Law cannibalizes Ms. Fonda's intricately complicated personality of stark idiosyncratic swerves, swoops and U-turns in a larger-than-life life (so far). The disparaging affront to the working woman manages not only to grossly caricature Ms. Fonda's persona but also, by association, individuals like Barbara Walters, who is used as a model for Fonda's Viola Fields, a renowned television interviewer who is on a first name basis with the world's great and near-great. The movie's script attempts to placate reasonable, clear-thinking people by having her let go from the network in favor of a "more youthful" individual. It uses other ploys to assure the audience that the filmmakers are really on the right side, but make no mistake, Monster-In-Law would choose to set back women's rights 75 years. They're actually saying Fonda's Viola should be replaced by a "younger" woman (code word for a bigger bust).

Having been axed from her venerated position, Viola, who's left behind four husbands, sets her claws deeper into the gorgeous man in her life - a dream boat of a catch, and he's a doctor. The hunk is actor Michael Vartan. But, wait, the movie adds smarm to its already overburdened plate of goulash. The object of her tenacious fixation is her son! Well, the poor thing did have a physical and mental breakdown following her toppling. A rest clinic has her out in society again but now into blinking, drinking and nodding implausibly. Even her assistant, a wise, fast-quipping helper played like Thelma Ritter by Wanda Sykes, finds it difficult to pamper her. Then, an atomic bomb threatens - her dreamboat has found the vessel of his dreams - none other than "Charlie" - actually Jennifer Lopez reprising yet again the role of a poor girl idolized for the genuine little article she is. O.K., hang on to your skivvies - Viola resorts to "nuclear options." It's war!

The warfare Jane's Viola engages in must have been passed on by the terrorizing Elaine Stritch as Viola's battle-axe of a mother. Who wouldn't go mad? Wouldn't you get (or go) a bit mad if your son introduced you to his girl by falling to his knees and pleadingly, proposing marriage to her? Freaking out barely describes Viola's wrath and, if there is a plus to this horribly negative movie, it is that Ms. Fonda puts so much gusto into her performance - as much energy as she has put into all she's done in real life. For right or wrong reasons and results, she's done it! We are perplexed that she's chosen this stinker to come back to motion pictures. But, to echo this picture's message: She's merely a woman. What else do you expect?

Aw, go 'wan home - ya' mudder fell into da wash machine and they can't get the laundry out clean.

MAYOR ED KOCH Goes To THE MOVIES

This delightful movie should be shown in every American school auditorium, particularly in New York City's public schools. It will make every student feel good and every parent feel proud. The people who conceived the idea of putting ballroom dancing into the elementary school curriculum at the fifth-grade level are geniuses.

The schools covered in the documentary are located in TriBeCa and Washington Heights in Manhattan and another in Bensonhurst, Brooklyn. The students are overwhelmingly Hispanic but include whites, blacks and Asians. They are uninhibited, smart beyond belief, and witty and knowledgeable in their comments on life which appear to be unrehearsed.

The dances, which include the Fox Trot, Rumba, Tango and Swing, are wonderful to behold. One movement referred to as "slinky" is performed gracefully and sensually without carnality or smirk by a young member of the Indigo team. He, with his wonderful smile, is priceless to watch. The various dance teams, distinguished by their different colored sashes, are made up of both chunky and masterful dancers. One street smart Dominican girl yells to her classmates, "Remember, its attitude." Proper carriage, presence and aplomb are definitely needed to win.

The theater audience myself included gave the film a roar of applause when it ended, and we were all beaming when we left the theater. Never have I felt more secure about the future of our children and the success of the public schools than I did after seeing this movie. Give the kids a chance and they will make it. It is also nice that the test results showing great advancement in the fourth grade throughout the public schools were announced within two weeks of the opening of the movie.

Let's not shed crocodile tears for the children by

Opera Company Loses Star the Night Before the Show

What do you do if Richard Hobson, your star Metropolitan Opera baritone, calls late the night before your season opening show and explains that, due to a serious family emergency, he has to fly to Chicago? Well, if you're Barbara Giancola, the unflappable Artistic Director of Opera of the Hamptons, you don't panic. Barbara called Douglas Jabara, who is already contracted to sing Escamillo in Carmen for the company later in the year and, despite his having a big concert on Sunday, Douglas, a consummate professional, appeared with the Opera Company on Saturday at St. Mark's Church in Westhampton Beach. It was not even simply taking on a role that he already knew, for this production of Summer is a Coming In was a veritable potpourri of music ranging from classical opera to modern musicals and contemporary opera, all designed to set the scene for a summer of happiness, warmth and love.

The elegant new Church Hall at St. Mark's proved an admirable setting with great acoustics, and the audience was immediately in rapport with the artists. The intimate surroundings enabled them to fully appreciate the beauty and complexity of these beautiful voices.

Maria Ciccaglione and David Katz are both now firm favorites with Opera of the Hamptons audiences and they led the company with that classic drinking toast "Libiamo" from La Traviata, followed by a selection of all time opera favorites. Then a newcomer to the company was introduced. Hai-Ting Allison Chinn is a young mezzo-soprano with a great future, based on this performance. She exhibited great range and beautiful tone and diction in music as varied as "Una voce poco fa" from Rossini's Barber of Seville to a wonderful duet with Douglas Jabara in the delightful aria,

The Cast

"Lacém darem la mano" from Mozart's Don Giovanni and then moved into a very different form of music with Kurt Weil's haunting "Lost in the Stars."

The power of ensemble singing was shown to full effect as the whole company blended their different voices and styles into Borodin's beautiful music, as they sang "And this is my beloved" from that delightful and too seldom produced show, Kismet.

After the interval, this fast-paced production continued to enthrall with selections from Phantom of the Opera, Tales of Hoffman and Les Miserables. The finale had been arranged originally to showcase Richard Hobson, whose performances as Porgy in Porgy and Bess have drawn rave reviews around the country. In Richard's unfortunate absence, David Katz manfully stepped into a role designed solely to be sung by an African-American baritone. This white, Jewish cantor explained how, last season, Richard had explained and demonstrated to him how to perform this role. After dedicating this to Richard, he then went on to give a virtuoso performance that really had the audience shouting acclaim.

An integral part of all Opera of the Hamptons' seasons is the introduction of new talent. Here Molly Mustonen, winner of the 2005 Franco Gentileca Young Artist award, made her debut. Molly, a vivacious blond, displayed a beautiful soprano voice, together with excellent stage presence as she sang "They call me Mimi" from La Boheme followed by a plaintive love song, "Trees on the Mountain," from a contemporary opera, Susanna, by Carlisle Floyd and then teamed with Douglas Jabara in that yearning duet "One hand, One heart" from West Side Story. Molly is scheduled to appear in other Opera of the Hamptons' productions this season and she looks to have a bright future.

All in all, this concert was a wonderful opening to the new season and full praise is due especially to Atarah Hazzan for her customary virtuoso performance as Music Director. This season will break new ground later in the summer at a new venue at the John Drew Theater at Guild Hall in East Hampton with La Boheme as well as performances at regular venues such as the Vail-Leavitt Music Hall in Riverhead and Castello di Borgheze Winery in Cutchogue, and a special benefit in Hampton Bays to help the restoration of the historic Ada's Attic. Details of the season and tickets can be obtained from Opera of the Hamptons at 631 728 8804.

theatre review: japes... by jan silver

There's a consensual ménage a trois onstage in Bay Street Theatre's opening summer production, the U.S. premiere of Simon Gray's Japes. Two of the play's three characters are brothers, psychologically and emotionally intertwined since a childhood accident. The third character is a young woman both the men love. The play covers almost 20 years of the threesome's connections — with a little surprise consequence at the end — but only two of the characters' feelings are fully explored. Even with some scene-chewing dialogue, the story takes a long time to play out.

Simon Gray is a well-known British playwright and author. His dramas feature witty, biting comedic dialogue (there is, mercifully, some in Japes) and several have had successful New York productions including Butley, Otherwise Engaged and Quartermaine's Terms. Japes opened in London in 2001. In a Bay Street program note, Gray writes: "Japes is not strictly autobiographical, but it is intensely personal.....the one to which I am most closely, perhaps almost umbilically, attached." But he reveals little of himself in Japes.

Gray views this play without definite boundaries. "It never really ends, or if it does, it ends with a beginning." What happens in Japes? The psychological scars of one generation bear consequences for the next and the next.

Two brothers, Michael (Sam Robards) and the younger Jason, nicknamed Japes (Matt McGrath), are orphaned as teenagers when their well-to-do parents die together in a car crash. The boys are both well-educated and live together in the comfortable family home in the Hampstead section of

The Cast of Japes

London. As the play opens, in 1973, Michael's first book has been accepted for publication and Japes — the name also means a game-playing, roguish nature in British slang — is lolling around the house, boozing and smoking. Japes is as literate and, perhaps, as talented as his brother, but he is an alcoholic.

Michael has fallen in love with an art student, Anita, who soon joins them. Anita and Japes have an intense sexual/romantic affair going on, which the good-natured Michael soon discovers and accepts. (Why? Michael is the character most like playwright Gray, but he never fully exposes why he is so accepting of sharing his lady and life with his brother.) Japes leaves for Guyana to try and start his own life. Michael and Anita marry and soon after a moody, mischievous daughter, Wendy, is born. Japes drifts in and out of their lives but the four have inextricable ties — with consequences.

Matt McGrath is a treat to watch as Japes. He makes the character come alive as a young wastrel, then a talented expatriate and finally a struggling alcoholic co-dependent on his family. Francesca Faridany is ferociously torn and tormented as Anita, beloved by and loving both brothers — and then she is chilling as Wendy, the punk/ex-drugie daughter who wants her pound of flesh.

Sam Robards, as Michael, must play constrained in the "straight" role of understanding, sympathetic, successful older brother and responsible husband/father/provider. Even in the final scene with his adult daughter, the playwright never allows the autobiographical Michael to show the deep emotional turmoil that must underlie his life of "loss, betrayal, redemption and acceptance."

Maria Aitken, a veteran British actress and director, directs with a sympathy and understanding for these characters and their predicament. She allows each actor his/her solos in the musical flow of an ensemble piece. Troy Hourie employs the entire width of the Bay Street stage to create a literary family's comfortable, lived-in home complete with writer's loft. Paul Miller's lighting enhances the nooks and crannies of the characters and the house, and Rachel Navarro's costumes reveal where each character is at different stages in their lives.

Japes continues at Bay Street Theatre, Sag Harbor, through this Sunday, June 5. Performances are Friday and Saturday, 8 p.m., Saturday matinee at 4 p.m., and Sunday at 7 p.m. Tickets ($42-54) are available after 11 a.m. at the box office (631-725-9500) or online at www.baystreet.org.

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

ANTONOW AND FRANKEL AT MERZ GALLERY

Myriad shapes are the common aesthetic element shared by William Antonow and Dorothy Frankel at Sag Harbor's Merz Gallery. But such forms are not ordinary by any means, namely because they conjure up varied philosophical and metaphysical references. One may even say the pieces deal with a system of signs (semiology) or "signification": the shapes (objects) are the signifiers, their meaning are the signified.

Here's an uncomplicated example considering that last week was Memorial Day: the American flag is a signifier, its meaning (what is signified) is freedom. Of course, this might not be the best illustration since our flag connotes different things to different people, especially nowadays.

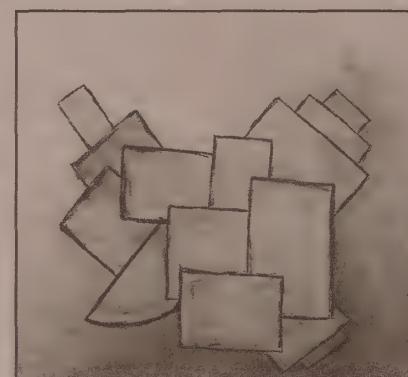

Applying this process to Ms. Frankel's clay sculptures we are reminded of monolithic (the artist's term) configurations, perhaps even Stonehenge, although that example does not come initially to mind. But we know that there's something primal, archetypical and ancient about the forms, nonetheless.

The primary shape is the circle (signifier), a giveaway when it comes to primal meanings. The circle, after all, has carried with it diverse and multiple meanings since the beginning of civilization. What is most intriguing is the fact that some of Ms. Frankel's circles are unclosed, misshapen and are in pastel colors. Thus, meaning changes in the process: disconnection and disconnection.

Whatever the intention, the pieces are well-conceived and heartfelt. We would love to see them as public works, like Ms. Frankel's hand sculptures in New York. Her endeavors deserve and demand a natural setting and context.

odd forms as well, but they do not primarily connote a connection to archetypes or ancient symbols. Yet they may signify other metaphysical aspects of the world: fragmentation, segmentation and lack of unity. These elements bond, nevertheless, and perhaps that's the meaning.

While the works are geometric in nature, their spatial combinations are arresting. It's also interesting that the artist's figures recall geometry itself, with diameters and circumference indicated in the design.

The artist's abstractions suggest real objects as well, namely a windmill and perhaps even a church in his "Vertical Float Cluster."

The show will be on view at Merz Gallery until June 5.

HONORING THE ARTIST: CORNELIA FOSS

"What goes around comes around," the old saying goes, and somehow we think it fits Cornelia Foss' latest New York exhibit: arresting images of the four seasons. "I was not conscious of what I was doing," Ms. Foss notes, "but this show, more than any others I have done, reflects my experiences during the past year."

An example from the current exhibit at Manhattan's DFN Gallery graces this week's cover, called "Stormy Weather." It's not the picture one perceives of East Coast climate, however: waves crashing, a dark and dank atmosphere.

Ms. Foss gives us comfort with her view of inclement weather; there's something calm about her painting, something uplifting and non-threatening that permeates the image.

"What goes around comes around" also applies as we experience Ms. Foss' spring and summer images as well, their colors idealized yet realistic, her settings both ones that exist and ones that will come to exist.

The same saying rings true regarding Ms. Foss' personal life. While she talks with sadness about the friends she has lost, you know that Ms. Foss' optimistic demeanor will return, like the swallows to Capistrano. We have a sense that whatever small or large event may occur during a given period, it will be deeply felt by Ms. Foss. Yet she seems to have an intuitive sense of life's ebbs and flows, responding accordingly.

Such response is not simply apparent in Ms. Foss' overt behavior, but also in her aesthetic process. Consider the fact that she may paint beautiful summer scenes in the midst of a dreary New York winter, where her only view looks out onto a messy and wet Broadway. Ebbs and flows persist in her subjects, too:

often intimate, at times distanced.

There are aspects of Ms. Foss' life, however, that remain constant and do not change with the tide's ebbs and flows or the principle of going around and returning. Those elements reflect what she likes and dislikes about people. Ms. Foss doesn't hesitate when being specific: "I like individuals with a sense of humor, ability to have fun, who are generous, and above all, have a lively interest in all kinds of things."

And what about feelings about her own life? Do they remain constant as well? You bet. "Mostly my life has been lucky," Ms. Foss comments with fervor. "There's nothing sadder than to do something you don't want to do or not knowing how to go about getting what you want."

—Marion Wolberg Weiss

Warming Up the Wharton Way

This weekend marks the 27th Potatohampton 10k Race to benefit FACT, The Foundation for the Advancement of Cardiac Therapies. When hundreds flock to the Presbyterian Church on Main Street, in Bridgehampton, they will be met by check-in tables and a good deal of fanfare, but when the paperwork is filed and finished most runners will be looking to warm up for the run.

Those invested in the art of yoga may spend some spiritual time alone on the grass, achieving a limber body and a state of peace, while others resign themselves to less holistic ways of getting the blood pumping. Maybe there'll even be a few people doing jumping jacks and squat thrusts, but for those who are looking for a race-unifying warm-up by one of the nation's leaders in musculoskeletal therapy, you're in luck. Dr. Jim Wharton of Manhattan's Wharton Center will be on hand to help you get loose for the big run.

According to Dr. Wharton's studies, the person in the grass doing yoga isn't doing herself any favors. In fact, she is possibly even doing herself harm. Although yoga stretches the body, studies have shown that these static stretches, which are held for an extended period of time, trigger the "myotatic stretch reflex," our muscles' natural defense mechanism against over-stretching. In fact, static stretching has been proven to actually lead to a weakening of muscles, tendons, and ligaments at the joints.

The stretching of the Potatohampton racers could go in two directions. For the New York City Marathon Dr. Wharton led continual 10-minute warm-up sessions for the full two hours before the start of the race and one massive exercise just prior to the starter pistol. This second session is designed to cover the body's full range of motion; opening up joints and stretching muscles.

The list of The Wharton Center's clients is astounding, from NBA all-stars to two-time world marathon record holders, as well as current American Marathon holder Khalid Khannouchi. But even more proof in the Wharton way is in the fact that Dr. Wharton will actually be running in this weekend's 10K.

So how should runners get limber for Potatohampton before the group stretch? Follow the basics of Active Isolated Stretching:

1. Focus on one muscle at a time.
2. Actively contract the muscle that is opposite the targeted muscle, which will relax in preparation of its stretch. (In other words, if you are going to stretch your front thigh you contract your hamstring and buttocks.)
3. Stretch it gently and quickly (generally holding stretches for about two seconds).
4. Release stretch before muscle realizes that it has been stretched and goes into its protective contraction.
5. Repeat.

Here are two stretches to get you started before the race:

Quadriceps Stretch

What You Stretch:

Muscles in the fronts of the thighs (rectus femoris)

What You Contract:

Muscles in the buttocks (gluteus maximus) and backs of thighs (hamstrings)

Repetitions:

10 each side

Length to Hold Each Stretch:

2 seconds

How to Perform the Stretch:

Lie on your side with your knees curled up against your chest (in a fetal position). Relax your neck, resting your head on a surface or on a pillow. Slide your bottom arm under the thigh of your bottom leg and lock your elbow around the back of your knee. Contract your abdominal muscles to keep from rolling. Reach down with your upper hand and grasp the shin (or ankle or forefoot) of your upper leg. If you are unable to bend your knee sufficiently in order for you to reach with your hand, use your rope as an extender. Wrap it around your ankle and grasp the ends. Keep your knee bent and your leg parallel to the surface on which you are lying.

Contract your hamstrings and gluteus maximus, and move that upper leg back as far as you can. You may use your hand to give a gentle assist at the end of the stretch.

Hamstring Stretch

What You Stretch:

Large muscles in the backs of the thighs (the hamstrings)

What You Contract:

Muscles from the fronts of the hips down the fronts of the thighs (hip flexors - including the quadriceps)

Repetitions:

10 each side

Length to Hold Each Stretch:

2 seconds

Lie on your back. Begin with your non-exercising knee bent with that foot flat on the surface on which you are lying. Take your rope and hold the ends together so that it forms a loop. Place the foot of the leg you're exercising into the loop. Lock your knee so that your leg is extended straight out. From your hip and using your quadriceps, lift your leg as far as you can. Aim your foot toward the ceiling. Grasp the ends of the rope (to maintain the loop) with both hands and "climb" up the rope, hand over hand as your leg lifts. Keep slight tension on the rope. Use the rope for gentle assistance at the end of the stretch, but don't pull the leg into position, irritating the back of your knee.

Can Do Kendo

As combination of spirituality, athleticism, grace, history, and art, Kendo is, in essence, the ideal "sport." The physical demands are intense, but seem minimal compared to the mental toughness required to succeed. Those at the Kendo school in Southampton seem to be gaining much practice in both of these areas under the careful watch of the only two-time winner of the United States Kendo Championships. Not only is he the only two-time winner, Mark Grivas is the only non-Japanese to ever win the championship. His rank of Kyoshi 7th Dan is staggering for an American, but Mark stresses that winning championships isn't really what Kendo is all about. It's about a lifestyle.

To the untrained eye Kendo is nothing more than a bunch of people dressed in armor swinging wildly at each other with bamboo swords, but as I have learned, this common misconception could not be farther from the truth. To the purist, Kendo is an art form, and a controlled and strategically thought out duel between masters of their internal and external worlds.

Kendo translates to "way of the sword" which is a vague phrase, with a somewhat profound connotation. What it means is to follow in the lifestyle of the samurai: the chivalrous, honorable warriors of Japan. This does not reserve itself simply to when a Kenshi (a person who practices Kendo) enters a dojo (a Kendo school), but instead it is a way of living which flows through all aspects of a Kenshi's life.

The history of Kendo can be traced back to the origins of the samurai, a warrior class whose job was to protect feudal kingdoms in 12th century Japan. This class of swordsmen held the same virtues as those associated with knights and soldiers around the world; self discipline, loyalty, honor, bravery. Although a mastery of the sword was required, the life of the samurai took on metaphysical meaning as well. They began to study Zen and various sects of Buddhism to increase their spirituality.

During the feudal system, the samurai class flourished and the number of schools for swordsmanship grew. In these schools, men practiced their skills with wooden swords so as not to cause great injury to one another, but by the late 18th century, armor similar to today's equipment was incorporated.

This art form almost came to an end in 1868, during the Meiji Restoration, when the practice of carrying swords in public was banned and the class system was destroyed. However, one samurai realized that because the class system no longer existed, he could begin to teach the art of swordsmanship to everyone, and so modern Kendo began. Today it is used by Japanese police officers as physical training and a way to learn combative skills. It has become more stylized than simple sword fighting, and has reduced the target areas to the head, mid-section, right hand and throat, leaving the rest of the body out of play.

Roughly one hundred years ago, Japanese immigrants brought Kendo with them to the west coast of the United States. Over the past century its popularity has grown dramatically, making its way all the way to the East End of Long Island, which has only a very small Japanese population.

Mark began teaching Kendo on the East End in Sag Harbor in 2002, but after the space was renovated, the class moved to Southampton. Now the school is held at the Southampton Community Center (across from Agawam Park), Monday and Wednesday nights from 6:30 to 8 p.m. The school, which has been in Southampton for almost a year and a half, is open to all ages, men and women. In fact, Mark's wife, Misao, is also an instructor at the school. The classes regularly have around ten students, ranging from teens to people in their fifties. The training is intense, but it doesn't jar your system like jogging and everyone seemed quite exhausted after the hour-and-a-half session. Beginning with calisthenics and basic moves, the class rolls into serious combat with bamboo swords.

Getting started does require a certain amount of money, and a full outfit, including armor and sword, costing a few hundred dollars. But most people who begin do not use armor and only practice foot and striking positions, then once they've decided Kendo is for them, progress to the next level. It is demanding, but the benefits will echo throughout your life, not just physically, but mentally as well.

Alternatives to Plastic Surgery

"To me, fair friend, you never can be old for as you were when first your eye I eyed, such seems your beauty still." —William Shakespeare.

William Shakespeare may have had the right idea back then, but the truth is, appearances change with age, and maintaining the youthful look we had ten or twenty years ago can be grueling. Some of us have tried every high-end product on the market from eye gels and intensive cleansers and moisturizers to clay masks and face peels. A healthy glow and rejuvenated look is what we all hope to achieve. Of course, there is the plastic surgery route (eyelifts, facelifts, tummy tucks, etc.). In 2004 there were close to 8.5 million cosmetic surgical and non-surgical procedures performed in the United States alone. Non-surgical cosmetic procedures tend to be less expensive because they don't involve the additional expense of anesthesia or operating room fees. Today, with so many alternative procedures and techniques, many choose to avoid going "under the knife."

I recently had the pleasure of meeting with one of the East End's leading cosmetic laser surgeons, Dr. Alexander Covey, in his Southampton office. While sitting in the waiting room I noticed every seat was occupied (quite the popular doctor, it seems). By the end of my visit with Dr. Covey, I was amazed to learn just how advanced procedures have progressed. "My goal is to improve the patient's natural good looks without surgery," Dr. Covey said.

Many men and women start to examine their skin more seriously after age thirty. Loss of elasticity, fine lines and change in texture (smoothness) are all signs of the aging process. Caring for our bodies is a full-time job and a life-long commitment. But it's imperative to get all your facts before making any decisions when it comes to what type of procedure to choose.

Dr. Covey offers a private consultation with each patient to discuss what procedure will work best for his/her needs. He also has a wide range of different patients with different issues, including common skin problems like rosacea, acne, and scarring, to "anti-aging" alternative surgical procedures, such as Mesotherapy, Thermage and Restylane.

One of the most popular non-surgical procedures Dr. Covey offers is Thermage. Thermage is a non-surgical facelift treatment that can help you restore your youthful look. Thermage is performed with the use of radio frequency technology, which helps to tighten existing collagen and stimulate new collagen growth, allowing the skin to tighten naturally. The neck, eyes, forehead and mid-face are just a few of the areas where this procedure can successfully be performed, all with no downtime and with long-lasting results. Some patients notice an immediate improvement, but optimal results will usually occur after a few months.

Are you also seeking to get rid of those unwanted wrinkles? Too much sun, smoking and poor diet can contribute to an accelerated aging of the skin, i.e. WRINKLES! Dr. Covey also specializes in Restylane injections. Restylane is an FDA approved long-lasting natural filler that can fill in your smile lines, marionette lines and plump up your lips.

As we get older, good old gravity will settle in sooner or later and love handles, bulges and cellulite make their débüt. Mesotherapy is another non-surgical body shaping treatment that can help get rid of cellulite and unwanted fat. Dr. Covey uses a series of microinjections to target areas (with very tiny needles) that consist of vitamins, amino acids and other ingredients, causing the fat and cellulite to melt away. Mesotherapy is the perfect solution to those problems where diet and exercise are just not enough. Patients report losing inches off their waistlines and lots of other areas after receiving these simple 10-minute treatments.

Dr. Covey has managed to offer both safe and easy procedures that afford patients a variety of options to improve their appearance without the use of surgery. We all want to grow old gracefully, but sometimes "Father Time" creeps up on us sooner than we expected. Stay on top of your appearance and check out all the options available.

Dr. Alexander Covey has been recently cited by Castle Connolly's 2004 Guide as one of the "Top Doctors in the New York Metro Area." Dr. Covey is Board-Certified in Cosmetic Laser Surgery by the American Board of Laser Surgery. He is also a fellow of the American Academy of Cosmetic Surgery and a member of the American Society for Dermatologic Surgery. For more information on these and other non-surgical procedures or to schedule a complimentary consultation in Southampton, Center Moriches or Manhattan, please call 1-800-40-DRCOVEY (1-800-403-7268) or visit www.eastendlasercare.com.

Kick Out Your Stress With Kickboxing

I didn't think that beating the living daylights out of a punching bag would be so physically and emotionally satisfying, but it is. Kickboxing is a great way to get a workout and relieve some tension and does not get the attention that it deserves. Mark Tuthill's kickboxing classes in East Hampton off Three Mile Harbor Road offers this wonderful form of exercise nearly everyday in the morning and at night. Just make sure that you bring a towel to dry off the sweat because trust me, you are going to be soaked.

Basically, kickboxing is an exercise that includes punching and kicking a bag as hard as you can for a certain amount of time. In most cases, the classes run about an hour. What is so amazing about the exercise is how quickly your body gets tired from fighting these punching bags. If you overexert by punching and kicking too quickly in the beginning of the classes, you can wear yourself out pretty easily. This is exactly what happened to me when I decided to take a kickboxing class.

Round one against my punching bag was definitely won by me. I was nailing the bag with excellent body shots and head shots. Strangely, however, the bag would not go down. No matter how hard I punched, I couldn't seem to knock the bag out.

After five minutes of a kickboxing workout, you already are feeling the sweat. It is very difficult to pace yourself when you are punching a kickboxing bag. The music is blasting as you and several others pretend that the bags you are punching are your worst enemies. You've got to be careful, though, because the bag is pretty tough, and sometimes if you punch too hard, it will bounce back a little, then swing back towards you just as you are throwing another punch. When this happens, you can very easily jam a finger or your wrist. This happened to me, and I've got to tell you, it is really embarrassing when even a punching bag can beat you in a fight.

If you are smart enough to not get beat up by the bag, the workout goes on to all different types of creative punching and kicking combinations which are a lot of fun. You really feel like a professional boxer training for the big fight, which is a lot of fun to imagine. The intensity of the people around you is also very exciting. Most of the people that go have been going a long time because they are hooked on the intense workout that they get and the pounds that get shed because of it.

When the battle against my kickboxing bag was over, I laid down on the large mat inside of the boxing studio and tried to catch my breath. Even though the punching bag had no arms to hit me with and no legs to kick me with, I still felt like I had just been beat down by a gang of angry teenagers. In fact, as I write this article, much of me is still sore. This is a good thing, however. The soreness means that I got a good workout, and hopefully will soon be able to finally pursue my dream of becoming a male model like my hero Derek Zoolander.

In all seriousness, however, this workout will definitely get you in shape in a matter of weeks if you go often. Of course, this is what it is all about, right? Having those nicely shaped arms and abs are always fun to show off down at the beach for all to see. What is also important to remember, however, is that kickboxing is a hell of a lot of fun and also a great way to relieve stress. After the workout absolutely nothing was getting me down, not even watching the news, which is almost always depressing.

If you are looking for a way to get your butt into beach bum shape, I highly recommend doing at least one kickboxing class just to see what it is all about. You'll be exhausted at the end of the workout, but you will also feel really great about how much energy you just exerted, and you also won't feel as guilty when you dig into a rich dessert after dinner.

Advance in Breast Cancer Detection

Infrared Sciences Corp., a Stony Brook based company, is attracting a lot of attention these days now that its Sentinel BreastScan system was approved by the FDA. The non-invasive Sentinel BreastScan system employs advanced infrared imaging technology and artificial intelligence computer software to help detect the earliest signs of breast cancer. It has been proven to detect up to 10 years earlier than other tests. The company is focusing first on helping women on Long Island.

Thomas DiCicco, the company's CEO and also one of the inventors of the Sentinel BreastScan, said that "Sentinel was designed as the everywoman modality, a cost-effective screening tool to aid in the early detection of breast cancer in women of any age. This is especially important for the underserved 18-39 age group of women, who until now had no means of screening other than traditional CBE (clinical breast exam) or self breast examination. Sentinel also effectively meets the needs of women with dense breasts as well as the ever growing population of women who have breast implants, for whom mammography has severe limitations."

The Sentinel BreastScan received FDA [510(K)] approval in 2004. According to the company, the Sentinel offers a different perspective on breast health than is available through anatomical imaging or clinical breast exam. Sentinel identifies physiological features of the breast tissue – areas of blood perfusion and angiogenesis as well as temperature signs – that are often present at the earliest stages of a developing cancer. Infrared Sciences pointed out that their main goal is to satisfy the ever increasing desire by women and their doctors to detect breast cancer at its earliest stage, rather than waiting for later stage symptoms to appear when outcomes are generally poor.

The company pointed to several items that make the Sentinel system a unique test; foremost it is designed to complement other tests and when used in conjunction with mammography, can dramatically increase diagnosis accuracy. ISC's tests show over 98% sensitivity to breast cancer. It provides physicians with a unique physiological perspective on breast health. Sentinel harnesses the properties of infrared imaging combined with sophisticated, proprietary software algorithms to produce breast health information not available from current screening tests. It is capable of imaging the very first changes in breast tissue that occur, before cancerous lesions are detectable through standard means. The test can increase confidence in results for patients with dense breasts and/or breast implants, for whom mammography is ineffective. Another important feature is the speed at which the test is conducted and the results are provided. This five minute test is touchless, painless, radiation free, and provides a fully interpreted report to the doctor within 1 minute, allowing the doctor time to utilize the results when the patient is still present, thereby eliminating the need to schedule any follow-up appointments.

DiCicco said it is "truly early detection and a good predictor of the patient's risk. This has been documented in many past studies." In response to questions about clinical studies, he stressed the importance of new studies, and added that there is a formal Study of the Sentinel BreastScan underway at Cornell University in New York City, and ISC is working on different protocol proposals with doctors at Harvard, Yale, and the University of Michigan.

To demonstrate its commitment to improving early breast cancer detection, ISC provides this equipment to qualified doctors free of charge. Generally any gynecologist or radiologist with an established practice will qualify. Since this is very new technology, most medical insurance does not yet cover the fee. This is normally a patient paid test; with the fee ranging from $100-$150 (the exact fee is set by the doctor). However, ISC is currently offering a free Sentinel BreastScan exam (starting Memorial Day and continuing into the summer) to the young women of Long Island in order to establish a baseline test for comparison to future tests. Women who are between 20 and 39 years old, who have not had a mammogram and have a doctor to send the BreastScan results to, should contact the company to schedule an appointment for a free test at their Stony Brook office.

"Women need to take charge of their own health monitoring and be very proactive," DiCicco said. "They need to ask, no demand, that their doctor contact the company to find out how to add the Sentinel BreastScan into their practice free of charge. This is the fastest way we know to deploy such valuable technology throughout Long Island and the rest of the U.S. and to start saving more lives now." We agree, and wish ISC success deploying this exciting new technology in the war against breast cancer.

Discover The Yogi in You

Life is a series of changes, a cycle of hellos and goodbyes, a constant adaptation. Acceptance of this fact is often a difficult task. For me, it's been my greatest life lesson and challenge thus far. Change can be disruptive and even upsetting. But a good friend once told me when I was battling with change and loss that when a turn arises on the road of life, you have several choices. You can refuse to make the turn, barreling straight ahead, perhaps over a cliff or perhaps into a brick wall. You can turn around and go back where you came from. You can stop completely. Or you can turn with the road. The healthiest option seems evident. But I would not have been able to accept this as a necessity before I fell in love with yoga. I find yoga to be cleansing and rejuvenating not only to the body, but to the mind and spirit.

Yoga originated in India about 5000 years ago. The word yoga first surfaced around 1500 BC. It comes from Sanskrit and means "yoking" or "union." It is one of the six systems of Indian philosophy, though it is not a religion and predates both Buddhism and Hinduism. When yoga emerged, it emphasized the revolutionary idea that enlightenment could be attained not by the sacrifice of others or of animals or crops, but by the sacrifice of the "self" or the "ego." This, in turn, meant that revelations would come not through action or ritual, but from awareness and wisdom.

There are eight limbs of yoga, each equally important. Each has a name in Sanskrit, the original language in which yoga was practiced. The first limb is Yamas, which means Moral Codes. The second is Niyamas, signifying the cleanliness of body and mind. The third, and the one most practiced and attainable in the United States, is Asanas, or postures. Every yoga pose is a different asana. The fourth limb is called Pranayama, meaning breath control. The fifth is Pratayahara, which calls for the withdrawal of the senses. This limb aids in the sixth limb, Dharana, or fixed concentration which, in turn, leads to the seventh limb, Dhyana, the Sanskrit word for meditation. Finally, the culmination of all these limbs is Samhadi, which means illumination and liberation.

The physical benefits of yoga are too numerous to mention, but some wonderful results include improved balance, weight stabilization, improved cardiovascular and respiratory efficiency, and increased endurance and immunity. There are also many psychological benefits of yoga. Yoga is proven to decrease anxiety and depression and increase self-awareness, social skills, and concentration.

I began my yoga experience by simply enrolling in a class. You don't have to begin by tackling all eight limbs of yoga. By practicing the Asanas in a class, you will probably find that the other aspects of yoga emerge. My first class was a beginner's open class, and I felt like I was drowning. I felt like everyone else knew what "downward dog" was, and to me it meant nothing. I tried as best as I could to imitate the other students. But my instructor – I'll never forget Lois – noticed immediately my desperation.

Even in a class of 25, she came over and helped me align myself. Suddenly, muscles I had never acknowledged before seemed to awaken. It was hard, but afterwards, I felt like I had just had a massage and bathed in a clean waterfall. That's how cleansing it was. I felt my posture improve and saw my muscles become defined. I felt a brand new awareness about my body that truly made me feel more womanly. And, experiencing my first attempts at meditation, I felt more mentally grounded and more emotionally strong.

There are so many venues out here to practice yoga, and many of the teachers hold classes at more than one place. Some options include Zebra Yoga in Bridgehampton Commons (537-YOGA), Yoga at Hayground in Bridgehampton (537-5522), Lotus Blossom in Wainscott (537-7442), Ananda Yoga Center in Southampton (204-1219), Om Yoga in East Hampton (907-0644), Transform Yoga Center in Westhampton Beach (288-6844), and Mandala Yoga and Dance Center in Amagansett (267-6144).

Yoga is an all-accepting, non-judgmental form of exercise that heals and strengthens the body and mind. No matter what your age, gender, or body type, including yoga in your life is a giant step toward health and happiness. Namaste – The divine in me bows to the divine in you.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

The lure of colorful farm stands all over the East End has caught our fancy. Beginning this Saturday, June 4, we will have the additional pleasure of the Sag Harbor Farmer's Market, founded by Sag Harbor resident Brian Halweil, a senior researcher with World Watch Institute, an Environmental Research Group based in Washington, DC. Participants at the farmer's market will offer all manner of local produce, shellfish and baked goods.

Brian Halweil, author of Eat Here, Reclaiming Homegrown Pleasures in a Global Market, W.W. Norton, 2004, has been a vociferous voice for eating "locally grown." He prefaces his argument for home-grown rather than food from distant locales by saying it is better for your health – and for the planet. He backs up this comment by explaining how "products enduring long distance transport and long term storage depend on preservatives and additives and encounter all sorts of opportunities for contamination on their journey from farm to plate."

Brian's enthusiastic support for farmers the world over is clearly stated in this valuable book. He peppers his scholarly information with delightful accounts of people like John Ellis, a Nebraskan, who went from farming his own land to opening a grocery store with fellow farmers. "At a time when the food on our plates travels farther than ever before, this grocery stocks its shelves almost exclusively with food grown and made in Nebraska." Jars of corn-cob jelly and blueberry jam, egg pastas, organic flax flakes, sunflower seeds, wheat berry salads and even BBQ sauce from local artisans and coolers are filled with local meats and other butcher standards, how refreshing!

And I loved reading about the Farmers Diner in Barre, Vermont.

Centered geographically somewhere in the middle of the state "where Main Street consists of a courthouse, movie theatre, hardware store, florist, bank and diner, a 1960s glass pastry case displays fresh-baked pies and muffins, a stainless steel milk dispenser hums its contents cool, and an old-fashioned blender stands ready to make milkshakes." The milk in the blenders and dispensers are certified organic from a local dairy. The eggs in the omelets are local too, along with the berries and flour in the muffins and pies from local berry patches and wheat fields. Even in the dead of New England's winter, the menu continues to offer a range of local produce and products such as carrots, potatoes, onions, applesauce, cider and beer. And I love this quote from the diner's owner and manager, Todd Murphy, "Think locally, act neighborly."

Supporting our local farmers and preparing foods from the good earth surrounding us is not only good for our health but it keeps money in the local economy. With our local farm stands bustling with fresh herbs and vegetables, here are some seasonal recipes for planning this week's menus.

SWISS CHARD STEMS WITH PARMESAN

The white stems of the leafy Swiss chard make a delectable vegetable.

Serves 4-6

2 bunches Swiss chard with broad stalks
Coarse (kosher) salt
2 tablespoons unsalted butter
2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
Freshly ground pepper
1/2-2/3 cup freshly grated Parmesan

1. Cut the leaves from the Swiss chard stems. Reserve the leaves to cook as you would spinach for a side vegetable, a soup or a frittata.

2. Wash the stems in cold water, trim away any bruised areas and then cut into 2-inch lengths.

3. Bring 3-4 quarts water to a boil and add 1-2 tablespoons coarse salt. Put in the stems and cook about 10 minutes until tender but still firm to the touch. Drain and cool and pat dry in a clean kitchen towel to absorb excess moisture.

4. Butter a gratin dish with about 1 teaspoon butter. Layer the stems in the dish with a drizzle of olive oil, salt, pepper and cheese in each layer, ending with oil, seasonings and a grating of cheese. Dot the top with pieces of remaining butter. Can be made ahead to this point and refrigerated covered for several hours or overnight.

5. If preparing ahead bring to room temperature then bake in pre-heated 375 degree oven for 12-15 minutes to heat through and melt the cheese. Serve warm.

ROASTED BEET, ENDIVE AND FETA SALAD

Serve this sweet roasted beet salad as a starter to a light meal or as a main course with crusty bread.

Serves 4

4 medium beets (1 1/4 - 1 1/2 pounds) 1 inch of tops left on, rinsed

2 heads Belgian endive cut lengthwise into thin slivers

1 bunch watercress, stems trimmed, well washed and patted dry

1/3 cup minced scallions

1/2 pound feta cheese, crumbled

2 tablespoons white wine vinegar

1 tablespoon Dijon mustard

Salt and freshly ground pepper

1/3 cup extra-virgin olive oil, or to taste

2 tablespoons snipped fresh dill for garnish, optional

Preheat oven to 400 degrees.

1. Wrap beets securely in heavy-duty foil, place on a baking sheet and roast for 1 hour and 15 minutes or until tender. Allow to cool. Can be made ahead to this point and refrigerated in the foil or in a suitable container. When ready to use, peel and slice the beets for the salad.

2. Divide the endive and watercress among 4 individual salad plates. Top with sliced beets and sprinkle with scallions and feta cheese.

3. In a small bowl, whisk together the vinegar, mustard, salt and pepper to taste. Add oil in a thin steady stream and whisk until dressing is homogenous. Drizzle over the greens, garnish with dill if desired and serve.

Silvia Lehrer will teach three individual evening cooking classes at Wolffer Estate Vineyards June 9, Italian dinner party; June 16, Flavors of Provence; and June 30, Mediterranean Buffet. Please call (631) 537 5106 X 20 for additional information and registration.

For the Love of All Things Salty

Once considered to be little more than a companion to pepper, salt is now often regarded as a gourmet food product. A glance at a new cookbook shows that chefs are no longer content to use plain old table salt. And why should they be, with so many options at their fingertips? Kosher salt, sea salt, coarse salt, black salt, Hawaiian sea salt... the list goes on and on. Here's a guide to help you figure out which salt is perfect for that dish you've been wanting to try, as well as some interesting factoids to add to your small-talk repertoire.

Today we mostly associate salt with food, but its place as an essential for human survival has led it to play important roles in government, religion and even language, for thousands of years. Nearly 5,000 years ago, the Chinese government collected revenue in the form of a salt tax. Nomads, and later explorers, carried salt on their travels. The salt tax was later a cause of the French Revolution. There are more than 30 references to salt in the Bible, and Buddhists believe salt repels evil spirits. The Dalai Lama was buried sitting up in a bed of salt in 1933. The word salary is derived from "salarium argentum," salt rations given to Roman soldiers, and words such as sauce and sausage find their origins in the Latin word for salt, "sal."

Today, salt is used in food as a preservative, an additive, a control agent and even a color developer. The most common salt is table salt, available plain or iodized. Table salt is useful for seasoning foods both before and after cooking and is a source of iodine for the body.

But with so many other exotic salts out there, why stick to standard sodium chloride? If you are looking for a more flavorful salt, try sea salt. Sea salt refers to any salt that comes from the sea (table salt, on the other hand, is generally mined). The Atlantic Ocean, the North Sea and the Mediterranean Sea are all sources of sea salt. Harvesters channel ocean water into large clay trays, and once the sun has evaporated the water, they are left with the salts. In general, sea salts are less refined than other salts, and so they still contain trace minerals such as calcium, zinc and iron. These minerals give sea salt its flavor, often described as pure and clean.

The ideal salt for the rims of margarita glasses is, perhaps surprisingly, Kosher salt, which has fewer additives and a saltier taste than regular table salt. Usually Kosher salt comes in flakes, not granules. These flakes dissolve easily and their flavor is less pungent than table salt. Pretzels are often made with Kosher salt.

Black salt is somewhat of a misnomer, since it is actually pink. An unrefined mineral salt, its strong sulfuric flavor makes it ideal for traditional Indian dishes. Hawaiian sea salt also strays from the white color that traditionally marks salt. Alaea, volcanic baked red clay, is added to the salt, giving it its pink color. Perfect for Hawaiian dishes, this type of salt can also be used to flavor pork loin and prime rib. There is also grey salt, found in the coastal areas of France. This salt is collected using Celtic methods, meaning it is hand harvested with wooden rakes, with no metal touching the salt. Grey salt has a light purple color and is considered by many to be the premier salt.

Coarse salt is less moisture sensitive than many other salts, and so it is easily stored. This type of salt, which many chefs prefer, is ideal for crusts on meat or fish, and can also be used to flavor pasta, stew and soups. Smoked sea salts have a particularly interesting formation process. The salt is infused with smoke flavor when naturally smoked over real wood fires. Especially good for cooking salmon, smoked sea salts are a way to add an exciting new flavor to your roasts, chicken and sandwiches.

The world's best chefs may know the secrets of salt as a tool for cooking, but they probably aren't aware of its other uses, both in the kitchen and outside it. A pinch of salt added to milk keeps it fresh longer, and a pinch added to coffee enhances its flavor. Salt can also clean wicker furniture, kill poison ivy and provide relief from bee stings.

Once you've amazed your guests with your delicious meal and your extensive knowledge of the salts of the world, be sure to indulge yourself by soaking in a bath with Dead Sea salts, which contain minerals to help nourish your skin and relax your muscles.

Dining in the Hamptons

Michael's happens to be a lovely sunset stroll from my house. Perhaps that's why when Derek and I walked in from the amber light of evening to the cozy barroom entrance of the restaurant, it felt like I was coming home. We waited a couple of minutes at the small wooden bar until our table was ready. A few regulars sat snacking on spicy buffalo wings, drinking Becks and Sierra Nevada on tap. I thought to myself that this would be a great scene to join, either for a solo dinner at the bar or for a couple of beers. The vibe from the bar was welcoming. Our table was ready quickly, though, so we abandoned the bar and walked through one cozy dining room and into another.

Michael's looks like a house, built about 90 years ago. You can almost identify which room was the living room, and in which room a four-poster bed once rested. Derek and I were seated in a dimly lit room in the back. Beside us on the wall were two faded family photographs, and on the table stood fresh daisies.

Our waitress, a familiar face in the Springs community, came over with a large pitcher of water flavored with lemons. She handed us a wine list, which offered a wide range of both reds and whites. I ordered a glass of Pinot Grigio, and Derek had a Sam Adams on tap. A piping hot basket of rolls, each encrusted with sesame and poppy seeds, sat on the table.

Our waitress handed us the menus, which reflect the restaurant's proximity to the ocean with a wide variety of seafood. The specials that night were Manhattan clam chowder and blackfish. We were enticed by the seafood from the appetizers. We passed up the red and gold beets with a red onion marmalade, which sounded

When he ordered it, I knew I couldn't, so I warned him that I would be leaning over the table to sample his. I ordered the twin soft shell crabs, but unfortunately they were a hot commodity that night, and I was told that the last order had just been sold. I was disappointed, but I had been curious to see what they would do with the blackfish special, so I ordered it.

Our waitress checked on our drinks and refilled our pitcher of water, and then came the entrées. The servings were almost too generous, but that's what doggy bags are for, right? The chicken parm was just as I remembered it – a crispy fried coating drenched in chunky tomato marinara sauce and baked, smothered in cheese. My blackfish was lightly fried in a tangy lemon sauce, and it was so flaky that it just fell apart when I sunk my fork into it. It was delicious. The fish was served over a bed of grilled zucchini, eggplant, and squash.

We both had a cup of coffee and shared a warm chocolate fudge cake served with vanilla ice cream and drizzled with a raspberry sauce. I could barely fit it into my stomach, but I managed a few bites, and it was a sweet cap to a lovely meal.

Michael's came under new management this year, and the owners, Rich and Deborah Gerardi, have quickly given it a cozy, homey feel. From the daisies on the table to the geraniums in the flower boxes, from the old grandfather clock leaning against the floral wallpaper to the old amber lamps drooping like bells over the tables, Michael's is a family affair.

Keeping Cool with Citrus

After such a lovely, warm Memorial Day weekend, it is finally time to talk about how to keep cool during hot summer days. Those who may have discerned a common theme in some of my writing here will be surprised that this article is not about alcohol. In fact, as refreshing as drinking cold beer, wine spritzers and chilled martinis may seem, alcohol actually has a dehydrating effect. It is generally a good idea to drink lots of water every day, particularly on hot days or when you are active, as the feeling of thirst comes later than when your body first needs more water. Yet, there is nothing interesting or festive about drinking plain old water while sitting by the pool or between volleyball sets on the beach. So, try adding citrus – and for an added twist, some herbs.

Any citrus fruit can add pizzazz (not to mention vitamin C) to your water. Lemon brings the brightest tang, while oranges and similar fruits like tangerines and mandarins bring a luscious sweetness. Sometimes lime seems to be the forgotten fruit, used only in Mexican and South American cooking and drinks, but a limeade type drink is filled with flavor without being too acidic or too sweet. The Internet reveals that some people also make grapefruit-ade. Start a Hamptons trend this summer and give it a try.

To make a traditional "ade," just combine citrus juice and water. Simply squeeze the juice out of the fruit, ideally with a citrus juicer to catch the seeds. Don't discard the pulp unless it really bothers you, as it has flavor and nutrients. Add a bit of sugar or artificial sweetener if you wish. The ratio of citrus juice to water is really a matter of taste, but remember that you are making flavored water, not diluted juice.

While using water is fine, try replacing the water with seltzer for a refreshing, bubbly citrus drink. In either case, serve the ade drink over ice in a tall glass, with a wedge of whatever citrus fruit you used as a garnish.

To take the drink to yet another level, add herbs. Mint works well with almost anything. You can use a few mint leaves as a garnish, or you can muddle the mint and let it steep in the water before you add the citrus juice. Another idea is to add a long sprig of rosemary. Because rosemary's aroma and flavor can be overpowering, you should add the sprig at the end. Cilantro is matched with lime in many Mexican dishes, so try adding a few leaves to your limeade for a South-of-the-Border twist. And, while not technically an herb, ginger adds a wonderful zing to just about anything. You can drop a ginger slice in the ade for a more subtle flavor, or you can make strong ginger water (usually tempered with some sugar) by simmering a larger amount of ginger in water for about 30 minutes and then removing the ginger pieces.

And don't stop with herbs. You can add other fruits, such as berries or melon, either as a garnish or mashed up as part of the drink. There are no rules here. Does an orange, blueberry and mint combo tickle your fancy? How about lemon, raspberry and rosemary? Or lime, watermelon and cilantro? You can even go completely crazy and combine lemon and lime, strawberries and honey dew, and a bit of ginger and cracked pepper.

By the way, you can freeze your leftovers in ice cube trays – or even make the drink with this purpose in mind. Use the citrus cubes instead of regular ice when you are drinking water, seltzer or even diet soda. As the cubes melt, they will provide a hint of the citrus and herb flavor to whatever you are drinking.

One last thing. (Sorry, I just can't help myself.) Any of these drinks or the ice cubes would be delicious with vodka. After all, keeping cool is overrated, isn't it?

EAST END KID: INTERNATIONAL CHILDREN'S DAY

By EMILY HART POST

With a little help from Katlean de Monchy and David Post

It was a splendid day for International Children's Day. The Ambassador Liu Biwei and his wife hosted the event at the Chinese Consul General in Manhattan, right across the street from the Fleet Week ships. It was special to bring together invited guest families from the leading Chinese adoption agencies and families of the Chinese dignitaries. Sound stuffy? No way! It was a wonderful day with entertainment provided by the adopted kids and the Consulate kids, including Chinese dance, Kung Fu, ballet, a magic show, and ending with a kids fashion show that had the guests cheering. The Ambassador had a wide and happy smile showing his pride. Then we were all treated to a Chinese lunch. Mom, Dad and I had a great time. I liked the magic show best, as I always do. I did not perform, at least not this year. I'm proud to be Chinese and American.

TWENTYSOMETHING... By David Lion RATTINER

Paying Rent?

One of the difficult things about graduating college and moving back home has not been finding a job or adjusting to new surroundings. No, there is only one thing that is difficult about moving back home, and that is moving back in with your parents. Actually, to be honest, living with my parents isn't the difficult part. It's telling other people that I graduated and moved back to the house that I grew up in.

I feel ashamed of myself just telling you this. I feel like I am a completely unsuccessful college graduate because I haven't really figured out my living situation just yet. Even though 100% of my friends who have moved into New York City are getting some portion, if not all of their rent paid by their parents, I still feel bad about moving back into the room I grew up in.

Ever since this feeling started plaguing me I have been thinking about where I am going to move. Thinking about this when you don't really have any money saved and when you live in the Hamptons is kind of depressing. You start to dream about the whole real estate market crashing or having a house accidentally donated to you. Then you start to think about genius business ideas (like a clothes washing machine that also dries your clothes) and how to make it actually work so you could go out and buy a house. Then you realize this probably won't happen and that is just the way it is.

So now I'm thinking about renting a place. Nothing fancy, just a place that is doable so I can save for actually buying and owning something. This is a really scary thought considering that the most expensive thing I have ever personally purchased was a surfboard that I bought two years ago for five hundred dollars. Now you are telling me that I am going to have to pay nearly double that amount every month and there is nothing I can do about it? It just doesn't seem right. They really should teach you in college how to psychologically prepare yourself to handle how much rent costs. After all, everyone that just graduates college rents, nobody owns anything. It's impossible, you are forced into a renting situation. This doesn't really seem fair to me considering the fact that when you rent, you aren't paying for anything. You are really paying an absurd amount of money to borrow somebody else's stuff. Where I come from, people just give you stuff they are not using. I have this bicycle that I almost never use, for example. My brother, on the other hand, likes to borrow my bicycle sometimes. Do I charge him for this? No. He just asks me to use it and I say no problem, have a good time, and off he goes. Why can't it be like this with an apartment? It would make sense to me. It's not like I am not going to return the apartment. That is a totally different story. If my brother wanted to keep the bike, then I would have to sell it to him, I couldn't just give it away.

The concept of buying a place is so foreign to me. I am so intimidated by the idea of buying a house. But I know that it is something that I have to think about. After all, I can't live in my Dad's place forever. No, of course not. But then again, he does have Tivo. No, I'm serious, he really has it and it is amazing.

Why rent when I can stay for free at a place that has Tivo? Well, that has become the question and I know that my Dad must be thinking about this and this is getting me worried. After all, my Dad is a businessman; he could start charging rent for me to live there. That would be tremendously depressing because then the whole point of living at home has kind of disappeared. Tivo isn't worth that.

So I guess I am going to have to rent a place, a small place, a room even, just so I can say I am living somewhere other than my parent's house. I probably will never spend any time there, pay an absurd amount of money and try not to really think about what the next step is. I can cross that bridge when I get there.

CLASSIC CARS WITH BOB GELBER

A friend of mine used to own an auto detailing shop in Westhampton. On the wall of the shop was a sign that proclaimed, "A clean car is the sign of a sick mind." Of course, Mark was only kidding, because his customers paid dearly for his expertise in car detailing.

Now that the summer season is in full swing in the Hamptons, I am sure that you've noticed the abundance of impressive automobiles. Like summer flowers, the fancy iron seems to appear when the time is right. I'm talking all kinds of iron, the Hampton standards from Germany, Italy and Great Britain as well as the upstart contenders from the better neighborhoods of Japan. Mixed in with this crowd are the big, bad boy SUVs, whose credo is "height makes might." All of these coming-on Hampton rides have one thing in common: they are impeccably clean.

An obvious Hamptons reality; you can't look cool in a dirty car. But there is one exception, a Range Rover. It obviously has something to do with its African safari mystique. When a Range Rover is dirty – and I'm not just talking minor dirt, but gobs of caked on mud and a windshield that is opaque except for the windshield wiper arcs – that is definitely impressive grime. One can only imagine where this baby has been.

Another vehicle that could possibly get away with the down and dirty look is the Hummer. If I owned one, I would give it the full "just got back from Iraq" look. Put faux bullet holes on the bodywork and make it look as if it survived a narrow escape. Hummer down Job's Lane with the windows open, "Ride of the Valkyries" going full blast. You'll get admiring glances from the Hamptons crowd, with applause from the Republican contingent.

Of course, you could get away with none of this silliness with a Porsche or Ferrari. These cars have to be showroom perfect. A few years ago I read about a fellow in California who shot another driver in a parking lot because the guy put a door ding in his Porsche. It's true, honest. I once saw a dog, right in front of me, pee on the wire wheels of my Ferrari. Both the dog and his owner were bigger than me, so I wisely decided not to confront the duo, but, boy, was I pissed off. Anyway, the point I'm making is that when around a Porsche or Ferrari, be very careful that you don't accidentally deface them in any way – their owners are fanatical.

Then, of course, you have the car collector. They are not really collectors, but cleaning men. All they do is wax and polish, wax and polish. The slightest smudge of dirt or dust on their car's paint, or, for that matter, underneath their car, drives them into a frenzy. In case you don't know, when cars are at a car show, the serious judges look underneath the car. They sometimes run a white glove below the chassis to check on its cleanliness.

It's been said that even the great tastemaker and car collector, Ralph Lauren, spends weekends in the Hamptons on his hands and knees cleaning his car collection. Of course, he is beautifully attired in the best rough and ready cleaning outfit of old creatively torn jeans. But when cleaning, he doesn't get his own brand of Polo jeans soiled, but wears Calvin Kleins. A lot of competition there, I guess.

I've always disliked those super clean cars at car shows, looking unnaturally better than they did when first manufactured. My fantasy is to pull into the center of a national car event driving a three million dollar Duesenberg Dual Cowl Phaeton in filthy condition. It would drive everyone crazy.

As a technical advisor on a period film several years ago, I made sure all the prop men "dirtied up" all the vintage cars, especially those wide white walls. That was real life. The next time that you see a period film, take note of how amazingly clean all of the cars are. Those are the car collectors at work, not the prop men. That's considered slipshod production.

For what it's worth, all of the race-winning cars in the Porsche factory museum in Stuttgart, Germany are displayed as they were plucked from the race course. They are stone chipped, with road grime speed lines around the wheel wells. Perhaps only Porsche and Ferrari can get away with this kind of presentation, but it's both authentic and inspiring.

How do you keep your car clean in the Hamptons? Stay away from parking under trees because of sap and bird droppings. Keep the car away from salt water spray. Watch out for the ice cream brigade with their scratchy clothes who decide to lean on your car while slurping. Use your bike more often, it's good for your health. Better yet, let your Porsche get dirty and draw happy faces on the grime. It'll drive fastidious Hamptons insane.

From The Runway By Kelly Krieger

To Dress or Not to Dress?

Knowing whether to dress up is an issue for many people attending parties this summer. The trend lately seems to fall into the "dress casual" look, but I still prefer to "dress up." But, is there such a thing as being too dressed up? I didn't think so, but recently a friend suggested that I start to dress down a bit.

"Perhaps guys don't approach you because you're wearing a fancy outfit and you intimidate them," she said. I was insulted for a moment and then realized that this was coming from someone much younger and decided to let it go. But then I started to scrutinize everything I wore for the rest of the weekend.

Too dressed up? As the weekend progressed, I observed what people were wearing, and who was wearing what. I was fortunate enough to be a guest at several "Hamptons" parties, and my biggest dilemma was deciding what to wear. The clothes flew out of my closet like a hurricane, and I tried on every item I owned, piece by piece. "This skirt goes with this top...but the shoes throw it completely off," I mumbled to myself. And so on and so on. However, by the end of my painstaking, decision-making process each evening, I felt confident about my outfit. That was until I arrived at each party.

The first night I was "surprisingly" a bit over-dressed. Who would have thought a simple elegant feminine black skirt and basic sweater would be too much? Almost everyone at the event wore jeans with camisoles or some other, more casual, combination. The second night I knew I would have to be fancier, but I decided to go down the middle, and wore a bright skirt with my new strappy turquoise metallic Kate Spades and plain knit top. I guess I kind of fit in, but people were still dressed in jeans. Jeans?? Well, jeans, bohemian-style skirts, flip-flops and teeny-tiny or barely-there tops. It's all about showing your tummy these days. That is, if you're a size 2 or 4. Hey, if you got it flaunt it, I guess. I say, I have too much of it, and I'm hiding it.

Supermodel and actress Carol Alt was flaunting it in her Dolce & Gabbana white jeans and baby T, Lizzie Grubman (Lizzie Grubman Public Relations) in her long skirt and tightly fitted terry-cloth hooded jacket, and many others followed suit as well.

Too dressed up? I was beginning to feel insecure about my choices. Would I have to start doing 500 crunches instead of 100 (sure I do)? Should I get rid of all my beautiful skirts and dresses? Should I go on a serious diet? The crunches and diet part, I guess in moderation. But as for the clothing and style dilemma, my answer is absolutely not!

I love the way I dress because it defines my personal taste. And then there was a sign that reassured me. I stumbled upon a quote by one of my fashion idols, Tom Ford. "I wish we weren't so hung up on comfort. We're in a beautiful room, and what we wear is part of the décor, as much as the paintings or the ornate carved ceilings in it. Dressing up is also a courtesy to others, and old-fashioned good manners."

Outfits can be dressed up or down depending on your choice of accessories and shoes. Glittery flip-flops and ballet flats were quite popular this past weekend. Likewise was a variety of turquoise jewelry and long beaded and crystal necklaces.

OK, I'll admit that casual clothing is very "Hamptons" because people like to dress comfortably on the weekends. That's why it's no surprise that such chains like Calypso (located locally in East Hampton and Southampton), which focuses on high-end casual wear, has had such success, with nearly $60 million in sales this year. Owner Christiane Celle continues to open new locations each year and will add London and Japan to the list soon. Calvin Klein, another designer known for his jeans and casual clothing, made a deal with Fingen spa, an Italian company that plans to expand the line throughout the Middle East and Europe.

The important thing to keep in mind when deciding on an outfit is personal style. Don't worry about what everyone else will be wearing. That's boring! As for me, I appreciate my friend's advice, but I think I'll head back to Magnolia for the summer where the men may not be interested in me, but they can surely appreciate my collection of fabulous shoes!

CAIN - SOUTHAMPTON

Jamie Mulholland and Jayma Cardoso, owners of CAIN Nightclub, have announced the opening of CAIN Southampton. The venue opened during the Memorial Day holiday weekend in the nightspot previously known as Cabana at the Capri Motel.

The newest CAIN features a brand new interior by designer Robert McKinley, which continues the South African theme of the original. McKinley has infused the space with a decidedly more resort-like theme that is reminiscent of the shores of Cape Town in Mulholland's native South Africa. "I really want to continue the experience for our clients and create a window to the beauty of Cape Town," says McKinley.

CAIN Southampton, the first of many CAIN offshoots planned, will remain open during the Hamptons social season, which runs from Memorial Day to Labor Day and will be open for business Thursday through Sunday evenings. The venue is unique in that it features both indoor and outdoor elements that can be utilized many different ways. The "Private Beach Club @ CAIN" is an outdoor seating area featuring beds and lounge chairs. Cocktail service will be available during early evenings and a variety of exotic cocktails and finger foods will be served in the afternoon and early evening. The indoor nightclub will showcase the many fundamentals that make CAIN in New York City so successful such as world-class DJs, Zuludancers, and percussionists. Holiday weekends will feature "Bunny Chow Sundays," a night popular in Manhattan on Tuesdays. CAIN's Manhattan patrons, who include Lindsey Lohan, P. Diddy, Kelly Ripa, Paris Hilton and Star Jones, will be sure to make the Hamptons location the newest hotspot for the summer.

CAIN Southampton is located at 281 County Road 39 (Route 27) in Southampton, New York. Call 631-287-9888 for more information.

CAROLYN'S BOUTIQUE - AQUEBOGUE

Carolyn Walter is a hair colorist and hair designer who owned a salon in her home in Aquebogue on the North Fork. Recently, she decided to sell jewelry and crystal hair clips in her salon. Her clients were so impressed and excited about these items that she felt she had to add additional pieces. When a little store next to her home became available Carolyn decided to take a chance and open a boutique. With the help of her daughter, Adrienne, she worked hard painting and beautifying, and then Carolyn's

Boutique was born.

Carolyn's x Boutique now carries a full line of accessories that includes bracelets, rings, belly and toe rings, hair clips and combs, scrunchies, scarves, shawls, ponchos, beach hats with matching bags, straw, casual and evening bags. New York Women in Film Sponsor Tag Sale Benefit

What do you get when you take one great organization, add another, smaller organization, and mix them together for one fabulous cause? In this case, you get a giant tag sale on a springtime Saturday in the Hamptons hosted by The New York Women in Film and Television and Fundacion Clementina.

The New York Women in Film and Television (NYWIFT) is a nonprofit organization that began in 1977 to provide education, networking, and advocacy for women in an industry that was once male-dominated. Members of the organization include women from all aspects of the industry, from actors to producers to lighting designers, and everything in between. Members have won Emmy and Academy Awards. These talented people join together to help preserve films in which women have had significant creative roles. This entails refurbishing older films that may have been damaged, as well as insuring that there is quality storage for all films. There is also a scholarship fund for graduate film students at various schools in New York City, and there is an intern/mentor program to ease newcomers into the industry.

Since its inception in 1977, though, NYWIFT has branched out to service more than just the New York film industry. The Fundacion Clementina is an initiative that began four years ago to help emerging filmmakers in Central America in the use of digital technology. Paula Heredia is in charge of this foundation, and she is from El Salvador, where the headquarters is located. However, students from all over Central America are encouraged to learn through this foundation. Right now, students from Costa Rica, Honduras, and El Salvador are actively involved. North American teachers are recruited to instruct students at the El Salvador campus through workshops and seminars. Students learn about digital editing; acting for the screen, sound and lighting, and the business side of film. El Salvador, Ms. Heredia says, has no tradition of film, so this movement is an attempt to give these cultures voices throughout the world and on a local level.

Ms. Heredia is also on the board of NYWIFT, which explains the relationship between the two. The NYWIFT has helped the Fundacion raise funds in the past and, as a result, Central American documentaries and film are being created. The first of five such works is a program of shorts created by El Salvadorian students, which premiered recently at the Ottawa film festival and will be shown at festivals throughout North America. It includes a documentary, an animated section, and a dramatic short, all of which represent the digital technology to which these students had previously been unexposed.

Film and television have emerged as the most accessible way to reach the masses. The United States has the funds to produce great films that have received worldwide attention, thus displaying our culture for the world to see. Movie theatres across the world show films like American Pie and Kill Bill, which reflect aspects of American culture. Countries without such funds remain unknown or misunderstood to the outside world. With the help of Fundacion Clementina, talented young people from Central America are gaining the tools necessary to join the film industry and represent themselves and their heritage.

This ability will increase awareness around the world, as well as within the countries themselves.

The tag sale is basically a giant yard sale, where you can expect to find appliances, clothing, framed artwork, furniture, and other wares that may have been one man's trash and can be your treasure. Proceeds from the sale will directly benefit Cinema Digital, the digital-oriented facet of Fundacion Clementina. Cinema Digital was founded in 2003 by Paula Heredia, and in her words, "it grew out of relationships between media students and professionals in the U.S. and Central America."

The First Annual NYWIFT Summer Tag Sale will be held at the private home of entertainment lawyer Susan Steiger in Wainscott on Saturday, June 4 from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. The house is located at 1154 Town Line Road.

Bugs Be Gone

There is a product on the market that can help make your property mosquito free! It's called a perimeter misting system. A company by the name of Mosquito Eliminator, Inc. sells, installs and services this product in the Long Island and New York areas. It is widely acknowledged that perimeter misting systems in residential use are truly the mosquito elimination method that works and has been successfully used in many states in the South and Southwest. Mosquito Eliminator, Inc. is now introducing this system to the New York area. The systems include a 55-gallon reservoir, a pump and a special timer. Their basic function is to spray a fine mist of a very dilute solution of a botanical insecticide called Pyrethrum in water, 3 times a day (early morning and early evening) for less than a minute each time. Pyrethrum is biodegradable and is extracted from a type of chrysanthemum flower. When used as directed, it is not harmful to children and pets and in fact, it is used in lice shampoos for children, and flea and tick sprays for pets. When sprayed, this material flushes mosquitoes out of hiding and kills any that are not chased away.

Homeowners today have considerable interest in reducing or eliminating nuisance mosquitoes and other biting insects, including ticks, from their property. Not only are they a nuisance, but the health hazard represented by mosquitoes has been heightened by the emergence of West Nile Virus, St. Louis Encephalitis and other diseases spread through mosquito vector.

West Nile virus is an emerging infectious disease that made its first appearance in the United States in 1999. The microbe that causes the infection belongs to a group of disease-causing viruses known as flaviviruses, which are usually spread by mosquitoes or ticks.

West Nile can cause life threatening encephalitis (inflammation of the brain) or meningitis (inflammation of the lining of the brain and spinal cord). Most cases of disease occur in people over 50 years old and those with impaired immune systems (i.e., those with cancer, HIV/AIDS, or organ transplants). Children are also susceptible to the disease, but it is rare for them to get very sick from it. Recent cases have shown that West Nile virus can also be transmitted by blood transfusions and organ transplants from West Nile virus infected donors. Health experts also believe it is possible for West Nile virus to be transmitted from a mother to her unborn child, and through breast milk.

Mosquitos can also transmit heartworm to dogs. They do this by spreading it from an infected dog to a healthy dog. Doctors have seen hearts so chock full of heartworms that only a trickle of blood can get through. This all begins with a single mosquito.

People increasingly consider their backyards as an extension of their home interiors. Accordingly, they are spending large sums of money on backyard facilities such as pools, spas, gazebos and outdoor kitchens. Along with this is a desire to enjoy these amenities and be "mosquito free."

The owners of Mosquito Eliminator, Inc. state that this misting system is the best of its type on the market. It has numerous features such as check valves and a motor flood prevention device to name a couple that make the system more effective, more reliable and safer. The system is controlled by a digital timer that has a five year battery backup and never loses its timer setting due to power outages or homeowner shutdowns for winter vacation periods. The system has a number of options, including two types of radio remote control controls, a rain sensor, a wind sensor and it can be connected to home automation systems and pool controls.

Mosquito Eliminator, Inc.'s equipment uses a Pyrethrum formulation from a large and well respected manufacturer. When asked why this is important, they answered that some of the formulations being marketed with other misting systems are from "mom and pop" operations, which may not be able to meet strict EPA guidelines in the future.

Mosquito Eliminator, Inc. will service and refill systems. It has a program called "Auto-Fill," where the licensed technicians will go to the consumer's home on a scheduled basis and fill the homeowner's tank before it is empty. They will winterize and start-up the systems as well. They also offer a program that will allow the customer to trade in any insect eliminating device that they have purchased and has proven to be ineffective.

Mosquito Eliminator, Inc. can be reached by phone at 631-772-4117 or on the Internet at www.mosquitoeliminatorinc.com

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

The Absolute Power of Gardens

I must confess – I am under the spell of my garden! I am not sure how it happened, but I am completely captivated, and cannot imagine feeling otherwise. There is not a weekend that I do not anticipate arriving in East Hampton. On these evenings, I take a flashlight and wander through the darkened garden, inspecting each plant, checking what has grown, what has succumbed. There is assurance on these nights to find the garden has survived on its own.

I really cannot say why this situation has occurred – why I am enslaved to my garden. Perhaps it is the twilight times I spend listening to crickets and tree frogs who, like sirens from ancient Greece, entice me to dash my soul upon the rocks, give up my spirit to the soil, and succumb to all that is good in nature. There is renewal in succumbing now and then, I think!

I recently fished a tiny frog out from the pool, washed it off, and took enormous pleasure as it hopped off into the foliage. Perhaps, at dawn, when the cool, dewy haze of morning and the fantastic slant of light appears, I fall in love again with each and every plant I have so painstakingly nurtured – like a parent with a child. There is, at these times, a sense of accomplishment, of elevation, of tranquility that is so compelling that I am transported from the earth to unexplored vistas.

Sometimes I am reminded of the deposed Emperor of China who spent his final years confined to a garden. Day by day - it was recounted to me - he tended flowers and managed dust. What a pleasant sentence after a life of power and disappointment with so much loss of family, friends, and position. Sometimes I imagine that I share the feelings of that emperor – fending off strife by tending and turning soil, renewing spirit by nurturing and growing plants! The tending, moving, pruning, and locating of plants and soil all add to my connection with nature, to the depth of my feelings and perspectives.

I realize so much depends on a simple crust of earth. Interesting to think that life would not exist without the first foot of soil! So much of life and death occurs within the first six inches!

As a gardener, I often feel like Adam in the garden of Eden. Perhaps I have been placed here to nurture what is beautiful, to sustain what is good in life. Perhaps my own transgressions have relegated me to a life of toil in the garden. I often imagine that I can fashion my own piece of the universe and my destiny, even if only on the small plot of land I call my own.

I have never been disappointed by a spring with bulbs bursting forth in defiance of the snow! I have never been depressed by the passing of fall to winter with the falling, colored leaves! Every season and cycle, I have learned, with its specific challenges and rewards, compels me to rethink the choices I have made, to reconsider the successes and failures I have had. In its own way, the garden has given me the tools to analyze my life.

Of course, let us remember, also, that absolute power can corrupt! Oh, and I have frequently been corrupted by my flowers to dwell too long in the garden, to wander too far in thoughts, to fantasize of things that may not come to be. My garden, I have learned, has absolute power over me.

Sometimes, when watching my pups wander through the foliage, sniffing and exploring, waiting for the dart of a chipmunk, squirrel, or fox, I share their fascination. I try to detect each unanticipated movement, to smell and listen intently for the crunch of a twig or leaf, to search each cranny where surprises may hide. How I relish overturning stones and discovering the serpentine millipede wandering beneath; discovering the shiny, slimy trail of slugs meandering along to find a lettuce leaf – or sometimes, disappointingly, my hostas. How I marvel at the occasional brown and yellow and blue salamander that appears in early morning like a dazzling, jeweled brooch!

I recognize that there is no reprieve for my imprisonment. However, like a prisoner who has self realization, I have come to realize the justice in my garden. I understand its cycles and routines, its joys and sorrows! I fear I will never be released from the shackles that hold me to this plot of land, but I revel in such bondage!

Shower with a View

I can still remember my mother looking down at me disdainfully, unappreciative of all the hard work I had gone through in trying to capture a nimble praying mantis that had resided in our vegetable garden. I must have been about seven years old, and as I removed my dirt-stained clothes in the mudroom, I heard her mutter about how much she wished my dad had turned on the water to our outside spigot. I would have gotten a good hosing down that day, I can assure you. If you have a gritty kid wandering around outside your house just waiting to muck it up, or if you want to cool off after a day spent working in the yard, there is a solution: an outdoor shower. These showers come in many styles, variations, and prices, ranging from $35 to $2,000. They come in kits that are easy to assemble and connect directly to a garden hose.

The simplest type of outdoor shower is usually nothing more than a brass or stainless-steel pipe connected to a showerhead, which is mounted on a wall. It usually provides a cold-water intake only. The more sophisticated models are freestanding affairs that boast solid stainless steel and brass construction coupled with a treated wood standing grate. Many offer both a hot- and cold-water intake. You can even find outdoor showers that feature a convenient foot wash for cleaning off sand or grit before entering your home, cottage, or pool. I've seen some that have misting nozzles that run up the central pole of the shower, and by simply turning them on, you can enjoy a refreshing mist on those balmy summer days. Some of these models also allow the showerhead to pivot, ensuring that water is aimed in the correct direction.

The best, and likewise the most expensive, brands of outdoor showers contain many, if not all, of the following features: rust-proof (resistant to saltwater environment), constructed of 304 stainless steel, utilize a metered push-button valve or a cross-handle valve, stainless matte finish, automatic shower spray shut-off, mountable on wood or concrete, foot shower, soap tray. These top quality showers are designed and built to last a lifetime. They are great for use at your home as a beach or poolside shower and are often used in commercial facilities as well. Most of these units are quite attractive and are designed to complement your home or recreational facility. Please visit www.target.com for more information.

A relative newcomer to the outdoor shower market is the Belvisi "Solar Shower," a solar heated outdoor shower that can heat 5 1/2 gallons of water with a built-in solar collector. Created in Europe, this imported shower is able to heat water to 140° F in 1 to 2 hours in sunny weather. The shower is capable of capturing heat from the ambient temperature in the air on hot, but cloudy days. It hooks up to a regular garden hose, and allows you to adjust the water temperature from warm to cold (cold water is delivered directly via the garden hose). It can be bolted to wood or cement, and is designed to be unbolted easily for portability. For more information, go to www.metaeficient.com.

And speaking of portability, there is a type of outdoor shower that you can take to the beach, on camping or fishing trips, or almost anywhere where you or your equipment may require a good rinsing. It's called the Action Hydro portable outdoor shower.

This portable shower comes with a 25-foot coil hose, allowing you to take a shower without even removing the tank from your car or RV. The pressurizing pump system means that you don't have to rely on gravity to get a powerful spray of water. You can even take multiple showers using one tank. Outdoor portable showers have many uses, many of which you don't realize until you have one. It can be used to clean your pets, your car, and sporting gear. You can use it for windsurfing, triathlons, cooling off after sports, or cleaning up after playing paintball, soccer, or other activities. The unit is compact and durable and is constructed of corrosion-resistant materials. Go to www.mediawaveonline.com/portable-outdoor-shower.php to learn more about this product.

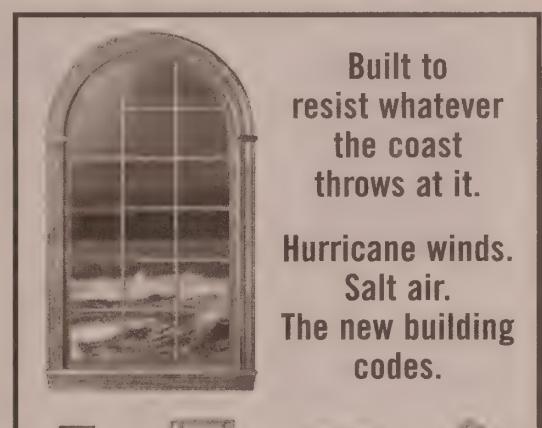

Now that planting season has arrived, my wife has been after me to get working in the garden. And I'm sure she doesn't want me trampling all that dirt into the house after I'm done working. I wonder if I can convince her to buy an outdoor shower? After all, we don't have a mudroom.

Real Estates

by Diane Strecker

The season is upon us and real estate firms throughout the East End are spreading their wings out as far as Montauk. Allan M. Schneider is almost through with remodeling the new location on Main Street. Prudential Douglas Elliman now also has an annex just outside of town. Last year at this time the brokers there said there was no way they would let the moguls in, but here we are and here they are. Obviously, money does talk. And, on the East End, it speaks its own language, one that includes many $$$$. Hampton Realty Group just opened a sixth office in Hampton Bays and has satellite offices that go out as far as Amagansett. Brown Harris Stevens just celebrated the opening of its newest location on Main Street in East Hampton in the 1918 structure that once housed the East Hampton National Bank.

With all the talk about the real estate bubble bursting, there seems to be no sign of distress. If there were concern would these offices continue to spread like wildfire? There is still plenty of steady real estate activity going on throughout the entire East End, where "real estate" seems to be what's happening here lately. Record sales and bids are making the news daily. People that used to be on the watch for who's here are now watching who buys what and where, and more importantly, for how much. Folks are becoming mesmerized with how much East End real estate can bring. It is causing just about as much buzz as the prominent individuals who are buying it.

Howard Stern has finally settled on a property after two seasons on the hunt. He first offered $17 million a while back for the same Bridgehampton spread that Tommy Hilfiger was interested in. Hilfiger, who also has been looking for some time now, had his sights set on it. Hilfiger bid $20 million and almost went to contract; Stern's offer was turned down. Neither bought the place. It has been reported that Stern has finally settled on a little more than four oceanfront acres on Squabble Lane in Southampton. A 41-acre Sagaponack farm just went to contract for $30 million, $5 million over what they were asking. The price of the Villa Maria has now risen from $25 to $30 million. Sam Waskal, party to the Martha Stewart scandal, has two parcels in Sagaponack that are said to be going jointly in the neighborhood of about $12 million, where on one of the pieces, there is no house but there is a pool. Rumor has it that he has already been offered $3 million for the lesser of the two.

The listings on the market today may include just about anything, from a small Montauk cottage to a piece of East End history to an elaborate Hampton estate with guest quarters, ocean views and surplus acreage. All are still bringing in big bucks.

New to the market:

In Southampton, the Henry Ford Estate on the Gin Lane oceanfront is now for sale. The more than 5000 sq ft home is set on 1 acre. It has a 3 bedroom guest house, a pool overlooking the beach and unobstructed views of Old Town Pond. The main house is a traditional shingle style and has 8 bedrooms and 6 baths. The home is listed with The Corcoran Group in Southampton.

In Sagaponack on Sagg Pond are four acres. It includes deeded pond rights and sweeping ocean views and is surrounded by acres of agriculturally preserved land. The plans include a 12,000 sq ft home with 8 bedrooms and 9.5 baths, a heated pool and a tennis court. The property is being offered exclusively by Allan M. Schneider's Southampton office for $17 million.

And in Montauk, the summer bungalow once owned by the late jazz legend Percy Heath is now on the market. The rustic home has no heat but simply oozes character. This quaint two story cottage with 3 bedrooms and 1 bath sits directly overlooking Fort Pond on about half an acre. It is a true summer place. It is listed with Sea & Sun Realty in Montauk for $950,000.

START DIGGING!

Who built your home and in what year? How much are your utility bills? How much insulation is in the ceilings and the walls? How old is the roof? Seem like a lot of questions? If you plan to sell your home, you're going to need lots of answers.

Today's homebuyers make their decisions based on facts, not conjecture. The information you provide can have a dramatic effect on how quickly your home sells. After choosing a real estate agent, ask what information should be provided to buyers. The agent should be able to present a "laundry list" of common questions.

Many of those questions will be related to the construction of the house and the performance of its systems, i.e. heating and air conditioning, appliances, etc. Property taxes, utility bills, and recent repairs will also be important. Get started right away – don't wait until a prospect starts asking questions.

You may need to dig through records and paid bills to come up with some answers, while the builder can provide construction details. If you have a floor plan or blueprint, make copies available. Have work tickets handy if major building components have been replaced or repaired.

While the agent is responsible for attracting prospects, you can help improve the likelihood of an early sale. Work closely with your agent, and then enjoy the results!

If you are thinking about purchasing a property in Palm Beach, use the best! Dear Dan,

I love to cruise along to the Orient Country Store for coffee, anywhere, even to the Cutchogue dumps! But my fun is less now with gas prices so high at the pumps. My name is Michelle Morgan and I am the president of the Marilyn Lives Society - a non-profit making club dedicated to Marilyn Monroe, here in the United Kingdom.

I am also an author and currently working on a full-scale biography of Marilyn's life. It is in this regard that I write to you today.

I'm sure you are aware, Marilyn Monroe lived for a while in Amagansett, Long Island, whilst married to Arthur Miller. In order to present Marilyn's life in a comprehensive manner, I will be covering her life in Long Island as well as New York, and I wonder if any of your readers can help me in my research?

I'd like to hear from anyone who remembers Marilyn, or knew her in any way, no matter how small. My aim with the book is to present Marilyn as a woman - a human being - rather than a celluloid invention, so it is very important for me to be in contact with people who met her during her day-to-day life, away from the glare of cameras and fans.

If there is anyone who can help me, I'd love to hear from him or her. My address is: Michelle Morgan, 14 Clifton Square, Corby, Northants, NN17 2DB, England. Or I can be contacted by e-mail at clarabow@doheny.demon.co.uk

Please be assured that my book is being written in a respectful and honest manner, therefore all contributions will be treated appropriately and fully acknowledged.

Thank you very much in advance. Kind regards.

Michelle Morgan

RIGHT OR WRONG?

Dear Dan,

Why have we gone to war to export a democracy that the Radical Right is fighting to destroy in our own country? Radical Republicans want to seize absolute power over judicial nominations by eliminating the filibuster. It's their low blow, under-the-belt-of-Uncle-Sam bid to appoint judges who will roll back decades of hard-won legislation protecting workers' rights, the environment, and privacy.

To get the support they need, these Radicals have resorted to threatening, intimidating, and demonizing American judges. This is scary!

Would you believe?:

- Tom DeLay has promised the Schiavo case judges would have to "pay for their behavior."

- Republican congressional staffers have called for mass impeachment of judges.

- Focus on the Family's James Dobson has called on Congress to eliminate entire court circuits.

- And good ol' boy Pat Robertson, founder of The Christian Coalition, says judges pose a worse threat than the September 11th terrorists. Well, God told me that Pat Robertson is one sick man - which happens to rhyme with Taliban in more ways than one.

The Radical Right's pattern of threats and intimidation must stop. Call your Senators! Call your friends and family! Our democracy is in danger. This is a 911!

WHO, WHERE?

Dear Dan,

I am a resident of Southampton, my son graduated High School here, and my family has been here for five generations now. As a mother, artist, American and Jew I stand firmly for diversity. The religious freedom and diversity of the Southampton community is being threatened by a lawsuit that is before the Southampton Town Board. Southampton's Jewish Center run by Chabad on Hill Street, three doors down from the Catholic Church, is being challenged on its right to exist there due to possible problems with potential traffic. I know about this because sometimes I go there, although I have been attending more in Sag Harbor at the Jewish group that is welcomed and holds services in the Presbyterian church there. Until Rabbi Rafe Konikov and his wife Chani arrived I had to go to other towns to worship. Although I am not as orthodox as Chabad, I find this group warm and welcoming for all Jews and anyone else. I believe in inclusion and unity, and thank you for carrying the information about the talk I gave as an artist at the Siena Center last summer.

The lawsuit being considered against the Jewish Center in Southampton Town Hall by the board was discussed on Thursday, May 26. It questions the right of the Jewish Center to operate three doors down from the Catholic Church based on a possible traffic problem. This suit was brought by supposedly concerned neighbors, seems to be two or three of these neighbors. These same neighbors have no problem with the traffic from the church. However, other neighbors are supporting the Center. Please note that there has not been any problem with this small group's parking so far, it is just a question of what might happen that bothers these neighbors and now seems to be bothering members of the board.

The good news is the Episcopal Priest, Father Larsen, The Presbyterian Pastor Bill Johnson, the local Catholic Priest (three doors down, and some other local clergy (I forgot and know others are coming) have appeared at the last meeting and are urging that the suit be judged in favor of the Jewish Center. This was covered in the Southampton Press and also the NY Post.

At the last meeting only two people (see above) spoke against allowing the group to continue in their now legally renovated building (many visits from fire marshals and officials later). The group has been in the present location for about two years now.

Last meeting over 100 people (I forgot the number) showed up in support. Still, the board seems to be having a problem with this issue. Some of these elected officials seem to be really concerned about the problem of traffic from a group that maybe twice a year gets to host 100 people just three doors down from the Catholic church and a short walk from the movie theater. (Again, the Catholic Priest is strongly in support of their Jewish neighbors.)

So, what can you do? Well, obviously you have the power of the press. Also, you can help by forwarding this email to anyone who is a voter in this area. If you know officials or folks in the press write to them. Urge clergy to support the Jewish community's right to be here by attending and if you are fortunate to have clergy who are lending their support, please let them know you approve.

I am proud to be an American. I believe in America and religious freedom, tolerance, diversity and the unity that we can all find there. Take a look at my website, www.ungravenimage.com, because it shows so clearly this is what I am about as a human being and as an artist. I'm the one who paints using the Hebrew letters from the Bible and prayers for every stroke. I am proud that both Christians and Jews are embracing my work. Since I was four years old and first came here, I have loved Southampton. My son went to school here and I have always thought of Southampton as home, the place of my heart.

So please come, urge others to come and write about the truth of this story. I remember you going to the different golf courses to see if they would let a Jew and an African American in. Here we go again, but this time there is good news in the support of the other clergy!

EINSTEIN ANNIVERSARY

Dear Dan,

Thanks for the wonderful update on the David Rothman/Albert Einstein Story. It is always great to see more written about this unique relationship. In my own way I feel I went to great lengths to prove Einstein's time space theory by buying this collection of letters and by having these letters mailed to the same person (David Rothman) at the same address sixty years later. Which was Einstein's intended recipient and destination. Hope all is well.

Best regards
Ron Rothman
Via e-mail

PS: if you have any more copies of the book, let me know how many for how much. This year marks the hundredth anniversary of Einstein's Theory of Relativity. It describes a complicated relationship between time, space, the speed of light and energy that no one had thought of before. In a way, it is Einstein's theory that makes the following story make sense.

We have about 50 books left. -DR

Police Blotter

Demolition Derby

Seven men were arrested at the J&V Salvage Yard in Quogue early Sunday morning after they were apprehended while conducting an unlawful demolition derby with vehicles appropriated from the salvage yard. Six of the men were charged with two counts of criminal mischief in the third degree, criminal mischief in the fourth degree and criminal trespass in the third degree. The seventh man, also of Shirley, was charged with criminal trespass in the third degree. According to Det. Sgt. Hintze, four of the seven suspects were accosted in the junkyard while the other three escaped on foot and hid inside a truck parked in a nearby field when they became aware of the presence of a police helicopter that was searching for them. The police report stated that the suspects had infiltrated the junkyard, started several of the cars, and were crashing them into each other. Besides regular damage, one of the vehicle's airbags deployed. Police estimate the damage to be between $3,000 and $5,000 and are still investigating the incident. Additional information is welcome at the detective division, which can be reached at (631)-728-5000.

Foxy Boxing Gone Awry

What undoubtedly started as a scuffle on the playground turned serious at Hampton Bays High School at approximately 8:30 a.m. on May 18. Three teenage girls, whose ages ranged from 15, 16 and 17 years of age, were taken into custody after administering High School vigilante justice on another 16-year-old student. The victim alleged that she received a blow to the head after an argument with one of the attackers, at which point the other two girls joined the fight. The 16- and 17-year-old girls were charged with assault in the third degree.

STOP FOR TURTLES From late spring through the fall, our indigenous turtles roam their now fragmented environment. As they wander out onto the roadways, they are often struck by speeding and unexpected motorists. These precious turtles are slow moving and can be easily avoided. When frightened, they withdraw into their shells and resemble an elliptical stone in the road. Please drive with care and help a turtle cross the road.
